107. ——— Grandson of mother's maternal uncle—Bandhu.—According to the Hindu law of succession in force in the Madras Presidency, the grandson of the maternal uncle of the deceased's mother is in the line of heirs. KATNA-BUBBU v. PONNAPPA. I. L. R., 5 Mad., 69

108. ——— Great-grandson—Son of son's son—Daughter's son.—According to the Hindu law of descent, the son of a son's son is preferred, in the order of succession, before a daughter's son. GOOROOBENDO CHOWDHRY v. HURRUMADHUB ROY. Marsh., 398; 2 Hay, 401

109. ——— Sons of grand-daughter.—According to the Hindu law which prevails in Madras, the sons of a grand-daughter are excluded from the inheritance. The plaintiff brought a suit for a moiety of the estate of his deceased second cousin, who left no issue or nearer kindred, claiming through his maternal great-grandfather. He'd that the plaintiff was not entitled to inherit the estate of the deceased. KISSEN LALA v. JAYALLA PRASAD LALA. 3 Mad., 343

110. ——— Daughter's son's son—Great-grand-daughters—Bandhus.—N, the daughter of J, inherited his property under Hindu law. N had a son, who predeceased her, leaving a son K. 117. ——— Brothers of whole and half-blood.—Where two uterine brothers and a half-brother are members of a joint Hindu family, and one of the two former dies, the brother of the half-blood is not entitled to receive anything out of the share of the deceased. CHETT NARAIN SINGH v. BUNWAREE SINGH 23 W. R., 395

118. ——— Rule of succession as between relatives of the whole-blood and half-blood—Brothers—Brother's sons—Collaterals.—The plaintiffs (along with others not parties to the suit) were relations of the half-blood to the propositus, and the defendants were his relations of the whole-blood; but, counting from the ancestor, the plaintiffs were sapindas of the fifth degree, and some of the defendants sapindas of the sixth, and the rest sapindas of the seventh degree of the propositus. Held that, there not being any special provision in the Mitakshara or the Mayukha in respect of persons of the half-blood other than brothers and their sons, the general rule applies, that the nearest sapinda succeeds in the absence of special local custom to the contrary, and therefore the plaintiffs were the heirs of the propositus to the exclusion of the defendants or any of them. SAMAT v. BINDERSEERY ROY. 3 Agra, 101

132. ————— Separated son—Father's widow—Inheritance not subject to obstruction.—Under the Mitakshara law, a divided son (no undivided sons surviving) is entitled to succeed to his father's share in preference to his father's widow. The son's right of inheritance under Hindu law is distinguished from that of all other heirs, in that it is "a pratibandha," not liable to obstructions, and the functions assigned to the son, and the character ascribed to him in the religious system of the Hindus, explain the preference in the succession accorded to him. *RAMAPPA NAIGERU v. 136. ————— Separated brothers—United brother—Survivorship, Right of.—Two Hindu brothers who hold the ancestral estate in common with a third brother may nevertheless hold self-acquired property in common between themselves in such a manner as to give a right of survivorship to one of themselves. Leaving out of the question the survivor's right to succeed, and looking at the half share of the deceased brother as having been held separately on his own account, his heir in respect of that property would be his widow, and during her lifetime the third brother could have no right of succession. SHAM NARAYAN v. COURT OF WARDS. 20 W. R., 197

137. ————— Separated grandson—Partition—Self-acquired property of grandfather, Descent of—United sons, Right of.—As between united sons and a separated grandson, the succession on the grandfather's death to the property, both ancestral and self-acquired, left by him goes in preference according to Hindu law, to the united sons. FAKIR-APPA v. YELLAPPA. I. L. R., 22 Bom., 101

138. ————— Reunion—Succession of reunited members.—In a Hindu family, when, after partition, certain members of the family reunite, Held that, if a reunion actually takes place between the proper parties, their representatives and descendants, however remote, will remain joint until a fresh partition takes place. must be junction of estate. When such reunion is satisfactorily established, Courts are bound to give a preference to the reunited parents to the exclusion of the members of their issue who have not been so reunited. GOPAL CHUNDER DAKHORIA v. KENARAM DAKHORIA 7 W. R., 35

140. — Separated brother.—A, one of four brothers in joint possession of ancestral property, separated himself in food, worship, and estate, leaving his three brothers jointly possessed of their undivided three-fourth shares. A died unmarried, leaving a son and heir B. The three brothers continued and died associated, two without heirs, and a third leaving a son and heir C. Held B had no claim to any part of the undivided three-fourth shares as against C, who took the whole absolutely. JADUB CHUNDER GHOSH v. BHRODBHARY GHOSH 1 Hyde, 214

141. — Reunion of descendants of members.—Reunion not effecting inheritance.—Held that after separation reunion in order to affect the inheritance must be made by the parties or some of them who made the separation. If any of their descendants think fit to unite, they may do so; but such a union is not reunion in the sense of the Hindu law, and does not affect the inheritance. VISVANATH GUNGADHUR v. KRISHNAJI GUNESH [3 Bom., A. C., 69]

142. — Separated brother.—Of three brothers forming together a joint Hindu family, one separated himself therefrom, and died leaving a son, the plaintiff. The other two with their families remained joint; one died leaving a son, the defendant; the other died leaving a widow. On the widow's death, this suit was brought to establish the plaintiff's right as one of the two next reversionary heirs. Held that a separated brother does not inherit, and that the defendant was alone entitled to succeed. Quere—as to the effect of reunion in inheritance. KEBARAM MAHAPATTAR v. NANDKISHOR MAHAPATTAR [3 B. L. R., A. C., 7; 11 W. R., 306]

143. — Separated and reunited brothers.—Widow.—A Hindu died leaving a widow, a brother, and two nephews, the plaintiff and the defendant. The brother was the defendant's father; he and the widow were since dead, the widow having died in the brother's lifetime. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to a moiety of the estate of the deceased by inheritance. The defendant claimed the whole on the ground that the deceased lived as a reunited or associated brother with his (the defendant's) father, whereas the plaintiff was the son of a separated brother of the deceased. Held that the material issue to be tried in the case was whether the widow lived in a state of reunion with the defendant, as her husband had done with the defendant's father, or whether she at the time of her death lived separate from him, though in the same family house. *RAMNARI SARMA v. Two of the brothers, being the sons of different mothers, subsequently reunited. The elder took the plaintiff in adoption, and died during the infancy of the plaintiff. The reunited half-brother retained possession of their joint property till his death, when the present suit was instituted to recover his share in the property. The two uterine brothers of the deceased resisted the plaintiff's claim. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a one-third share. RAMASAMI v. VENKATESAM 1 L. R., 16 Mad., 440

146. — Presumption.—Marriage of daughter into another family.—A partition having taken place among three brothers, A, B, C, the members of a joint family, two of the brothers, A and B, subsequently reunited. A died leaving two grandsons. On the death of B leaving a daughter, who married but subsequently died without male issue, the grandsons and the sole representative of C, who also had died, claimed to be entitled as one of the reversionary heirs of B to one-third of his property. Held that, the daughter of B having married into another family, no presumption could be drawn from the reunion of A and B that the co-parcenary continued as between the defendants of A and B up to the death of B's daughter. *KRISHN SEN v. 166. ———— General rules—Succession of female heirs—Nature of property.—It is not the universal rule that a Hindu woman cannot inherit so long as there is a male representative of the family. Her right to inherit depends on the nature of the property. If the property be the joint property of an undivided Hindu family, females are only entitled to maintenance; but if the property be held as a separate or divided property, it devolves upon the female heirs in their proper order of succession. *SOORJOON v. 168. ———— Limited estate in immoveable property inherited by females who have become members of family by marriage—Absolute estate in immoveable property taken by females who have not become members of family by marriage—Nature of estate taken by widow, mother, grandmother, daughter, sister, maternal great-niece.—A maternal great-niece inheriting property is in the same position, as regards the nature of the estate taken by her, as a daughter or a sister. The rule which, in the Presidency of Bombay, restricts the alienation of property by a widow succeeding to her husband or a mother succeeding to her son, does not apply to women who have not become members of the family by marriage, e.g., a daughter takes an absolute estate in the property which she inherits from her father, and a sister takes a like estate in property inherited from her brother. The above rule, which restricts the alienation of property by a widow inheriting from her husband or by a mother inheriting from her son, would seem to be applicable to a grandmother inheriting from her grandson, or to the widow of a sapinda, for they, like the widow and mother, enter by marriage into the family whence the property comes which they inherit. The plaintiff sued to recover the moveable and immoveable property left by his brother's widow, L, who died without issue. The property in question had been given to L and her grandmother, R, jointly by R's sister, M (L's maternal grandmother), who executed to them a deed of gift dated 17th

December 1848. On her death, R and L took possession, and remained in joint possession until the death of R, which occurred in 1867. L was thenceforward, until her death on April 19th, 1869, in sole possession. The plaintiff had obtained a certificate of heirship to L under Bombay Regulation VIII of 1827. The defendants were L's first cousins once removed. They claimed under a deed of gift executed to them dated 27th February 1869, and duly registered. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding the deed of gift to be ultra vires both as to the moveable and immoveable property. On appeal to the District Court, the Judge varied the decree of the lower Court, holding the deed of gift to be ultra vires only as to the immoveable property, and he varied the decree by awarding to the plaintiff as heir of L the immoveable property only. On appeal to the High Court, the only question argued was the nature of the estate taken by L in the immoveable property, her absolute right to the moveable property being admitted. Held that, whether L took by grant or by inheritance from M, she took an absolute estate, and, being as she was without issue, had complete power to execute the deed of gift in favour of the defendants. *TULJARAM MORARJI v. of "unprovided" for.—The estate of a deceased Hindu governed by the law of the Mitakshara was in the possession of one of his daughters, who was in poor circumstances. His other daughter, who was well off and possessed of property, claimed to share in such estate, contending, with reference to the law of the Mitakshara, that, as no provision had been made for her by her father, she was "unprovided" for within the meaning of that law, and therefore entitled to share in such estate. Held that such expression must be construed irrespective of the sources of provision or non-provision. DANNO v. 189. ————— Exclusion of sons by daughters in succession to stridhan property—Mitakshara law—Mayukha law.—According to the Mitakshara, the daughter takes an absolute estate which classifies as her stridhan, and descends to her own heirs, i.e., to her daughters to the exclusion of her sons. The plaintiff sued, as the heir of her mother, V, to recover certain property which V had inherited from her father. The defence was that plaintiff's brothers excluded her title. Held that, the case being governed by the Mitakshara (which, and not the Mayukha, is the chief authority in the Ratnagiri District), the property in dispute descended to V's daughter (the plaintiff), and not to V's sons. JANKIBAI v. On her husband's death, S continued to reside with her brothers, and was supported out of the income of the joint estate. All the daughters married during the lifetime of S, and B became a widow without having had a child. After S's death and during the lifetime of S M, N also became a childless widow. S M died after her mother, leaving a son R K. R K, on attaining majority, sued to recover, with mesne profits, a four-anna share of the ancestral estates to which he claimed to be entitled on his mother's death as heir of R, and from which he alleged he had been dispossessed by the representatives of R's brothers, whom he made defendants in the suit, joining B and N with them as co-defendants. Held that B, being a childless widow at the time of her mother's death, could take no interest in her father's estate. Held also that on their mother's death S M and N, as heirs of their father, took a joint estate in his succession, and on S M's death the estate which had come to her and N jointly survived to N, since the fact of the latter being at that time a childless widow did not destroy the right

223. ————— Law of Western India—Viramitrodaya.—Under the Hindu law prevailing in Western India, a sister succeeds to the estate of her deceased brother in preference to a separated and remote male relative of the deceased. The Viramitrodaya is an authority in Benares rather than in Bombay, and its doctrine—that, where there has been an intervening holder between a brother and sister or a father and daughter, the inheritance opens, and the sister and daughter are excluded, and the next male heirs come in—has not been followed in this Presidency. DHONDU GURAY v. GANGABAI

[1 L. R., 3 Bom., 200]

224. ————— Sisters take absolutely in severalty—Daughters.—In the Bombay Presidency sisters take by inheritance from a brother absolute estates in severalty. On the death of a son without leaving wife or child, his estate goes to his mother, and on her death to his sisters as his heirs. The sisters take an absolute estate in severalty, and not as joint tenants. HINDABAI v. ANAOHARYA

[1 L. R., 15 Bom., 206]

225. ————— Cousin on paternal side once removed.—Under the Hindu law, a sister succeeds as heir to the estate of her deceased brother, in preference to his cousin on the paternal side one degree removed. Krishnaji v. Pandurang, 13 Bom., 66, referred to and distinguished. BIRU v. KHARDU in the Presidency of Bombay, a full-sister is the heir of her deceased brother, in preference either to his step-mother or paternal first cousin. Vinayak Anandray v. Lakshmbai, 1 Bom., 117; 3 W. R., P. C., 41; 9 Moore's I. A., 516; Shakharam Sadashiv Adhikari v. Sitabhai, 1 L. R., 3 Bom., 253, followed. LAKSHMI v. DADA NANAJI

[1 L. R., 4 Bom., 210]

227. ————— Sisters endowed and unendowed, Equal right of.—Hindu sisters, when they succeed, take equally. An unendowed sister has no prior right of succession over an endowed sister, such as an unendowed daughter has over an endowed daughter. BRAGINTHEAI v. BAYA

[1 L. R., 5 Bom., 264]

228. ————— Daughter of a predeceased son.—In the island of Bombay the sister's place as heir is to be determined by the text of Mayukha. Both under the Mayukha and the Mitakhara, the sister comes in as a gotraja-sapinda, and as such must be postponed to the brother's son, who is a sapinda. MULJI PURSHOTUM v. CURSANDAS NATHA . . . 1 L. R., 24 Bom., 563

229. ————— Right of sister to inherit in preference to half-brother—Estate taken by a mother in her son's immoveable property—Mitakhara and Mayukha, Authority of.—A Hindu died possessed of certain immoveable property situated in the district of Thana, in the Northern Konkan, leaving him surviving a mother, a full-sister, and a separated half-brother. His mother succeeded to his estate, and held it till her death. The half-brother then sued for a declaration of his right to the estate of his deceased brother. Held that the full-sister, and not the half-brother, was entitled to succeed as heir to the estate of her deceased brother. Held also that the decision in Vinayak Anandray v. Lakshmbai, 1 Bom., 117; 9 Moore's I. A., 516, must be regarded as of general authority in the Presidency of Bombay, except where an invariable and ancient special usage to the contrary is alleged and proved. Scoble—The law of the Mayukha should prevail in the Northern Konkan. Krishnaji v. Pandurang, 13 Bom., 66, and Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mastubhai, 1 L. R., 3 Bom., 418, referred to. It is settled law that a mother succeeding, on the death of her son, to his immoveable property takes only such a limited estate in it as a Hindu widow takes in the immoveable property of her husband dying without male issue, and that, on her death, her son's heir succeeds to such property. SAKHARAM SADASHIV ADHIKARI v. SITABAI . . . 1 L. R., 3 Bom., 253

230. ————— A sister may succeed to her brother and sue for the recovery of property unlawfully alienated by their mother which the latter inherited on the death of her son. KUTRI ANMAL v. RADAKRISHNA AITAN . . . 3 Mad., 66

paternal uncle's widow. The law as to the succession of a full-sister in the Presidency of Bombay does not rest solely upon either the Mitakshara or the Mayukha, but is built upon both taken conjointly. The case of Vinayak Anandran v. Lakshmbai, 1 Bom., 117 : 9 Moore's L. A., 516, decided that in the Presidency of Bombay the term "brothers" occurring in the Mitakshara (ch. II, s. 14, pl i) should be taken to include sisters. As the term "brothers," while including sisters, introduces them after brothers, so the term "half-brothers" must be regarded as including half-sisters and as bringing them in after half-brothers. *KESHERBAI v. Of those children, the two daughters associated together leading the life of prostitutes, and the two sons separated themselves from their sisters and observed caste usage. The elder daughter died leaving property in land. Held that the sister succeeded to the deceased in preference to the brother. SIVABANGU v. MINAL I. L. R., 12 Mad., 277

246. — Brother of husband.—According to the Dayabhaga, a Hindu widow is the heiress of her husband in preference to his brother. CHUNDER KANT SURMAN v. BUNSHES DEB SURMAN 6 W. R., 61

247. — Right to succeed to family property.—A Hindu widow's right to succeed to her husband's ancestral undivided property is only as his immediate heir. A widow can only inherit family property where there has been a partition among the co-parceners, of whom her husband was one, or where the whole property has vested in her husband by the death of all the other co-parceners. The widow of an undivided Hindu, who leaves a co-parcener him surviving, has, like the widow of a divided Hindu who leaves male issue, merely a right to maintenance. The limit of the "co-heirs" must be held to include undivided collateral relations, who are descendants in the male line of one who was a co-parcener with an ancestor of the last possessor. have interests which pass inter se by right of survivorship, and a widow's right as heir is excluded by the fact when any of such collateral kinsmen survive her husband. The governing principle of the rule is co-parcenary survivorship, which precludes alike the right of the widow and every other member of the family, who has no right to the enjoyment of the estate before the death of the possessor. YENUMULA GAYURIDEVAMMA GARU v. 259. ————— Sapindas—
Law in Bombay.—In the Presidency and Island of Bombay the wife is a sapinda as well as a gotraja of her husband, and, if he die (without leaving a son or grandson), she, on the subsequent death of his separated sapinda and in the absence of any specially designated heir entitled to preference, ranks in the same place in the order of succession to the property of such separated sapinda as her husband would have occupied if he were living. Thus the widow of first cousin ex-parte paterna of the deceased propertius was held prior in order of succession to a fifth male cousin ex-parte paterna of the same. Or, in other words, a wife becomes by her marriage a sagotra-sapinda of her husband and his gotraja-sapinda, and in that capacity succeeds as a widow to property which he would have taken as a sapinda before the male representative of a remoter branch. The Institutes of Manu, the Mitakshara, and the Mayukha, although of great authority in the Presidency of Bombay, are all subject to the control of law and usage. No one of them is, as a whole, in full force in any part of the Presidency. In all of them there are precepts which, if they ever were practical law, have, for a time beyond the memory of living men, been obsolete. LALLUBHAI BAPUBHAI v. MANEYUBHAI

[I. L. R., 2 Bom., 368

In the same case on appeal it was held by the Privy Council.—By the Hindu law in force in Western India the widow of a collateral relation, although she is not specified in the texts amongst the heirs to members of her husband's family, may come into the succession as one of the classes of gotraja-sapindas of that family. According to the law of the Mitakshara as accepted in Western India, the right to inherit in the classes of gotraja-sapindas is to be determined by family relationship, or the community of corporal particles, and not only by the capacity of performing funeral rites. The High Court having affirmed as a right, according to the law actually prevalent in Western India, the claim of a widow of a first cousin, on the father's side, of the deceased to inherit his estate as a gotraja-sapinda, it was held that there was no reason for withholding from that doctrine the force of law; the right of the widow being mainly rested on the ground of positive acceptance and usage. In this case the widow of a first cousin of the deceased, on the father's side, was held to have become by her marriage gotraja-sapinda of her husband's cousin's family, and to have a title to succeed to the estate of

260. ————— Heirs after widow's death—Female heir—Widow of gotraja-sapinda—Stridhan.—N and H were divided brothers. H died first, leaving a son named T. N afterwards died childless, leaving his widow J, who took possession of N's property. T died childless, leaving only his widow B M, who succeeded to the property on J's death. After the death of B M, the plaintiff, who was the son of T's sister, sued to recover the property from the defendants, who were distant samanodaka relations of N. It was contended on the plaintiff's behalf that on J's death B M took the property as her stridhan acquired by inheritance, and that the plaintiff, as bandhu of her husband T, was heir to B M, who died without issue. Held (confirming the decree dismissing the suit) that on J's death (N and H being divided) B M succeeded to the property as a gotraja-sapinda, being the widow of T, the nephew of N. As such, she took only a life-interest in the property, and had no absolute interest in it as in her stridhan proper. In the Presidency of Bombay female heirs who by marriage enter into the gotra of the male whom they succeed (including widow, mother, grandmother, the widow of a gotraja-sapinda, etc.) take only a widow's estate in property which they inherit from the last male owner. Whether the estate inherited by these female heirs is called their stridhan or not, their restricted rights over it are admitted by all schools. MADHAVRAM MUGATRAM v. 281. ———— Illegitimate son and daughters—Property of mother.—A Hindu woman having daughters by one paramour and a son by another died leaving a house. The daughter sued the son and his assignee for possession of the house in succession to their mother. It was inter alia pleaded for the defence that the plaintiffs could not recover the house for the reason that it had been derived from the putative father of the first defendant, but this was not proved. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Scilicet—That the decision would have been the same even if the allegation on which the above plea was based had been established. ABUNAGIRI MADALE v. BANGANAYAKI AMMAL I. L. R., 21 Mad., 40

282. ———— Maintenance, Right to—Sudras—Issue of Pat marriage.—The general result of the authorities, both juridical and forensic, is that among the three regenerate classes of Hindus (Brahmans, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas) illegitimate children are entitled to maintenance, but cannot inherit, unless there be local usage to the contrary; and that, among the Sudra class, illegitimate children, in certain cases at least, do inherit. The extent to which this right exists considered, and the texts of Hindu law books bearing on the point referred to. According to Vijnayanesvara, the author of the Mitakshara (Ch. I, s. 12), the father of an illegitimate son by a Dasi among Sudras may, in his (the father's) lifetime, allot to such son a share equal to that of a legitimate son, and, if the father die without making such allotment, the illegitimate son by the Dasi is entitled to half the share of a legitimate son, and, if there be no legitimate son and no legitimate daughter or son of such a daughter, the illegitimate son by the Dasi takes the whole estate. If, however, there be a legitimate daughter or legitimate son of such a daughter, the illegitimate son would take only half of the share of a legitimate son, and such daughter or daughter's son would take the residue of the property, subject to the charge of maintaining the widow of the deceased proprietor. 202: 14 W. R., P. C., 88, reversing 2 Mad., 369: "Supposing the sons, or either of them, to have been legitimate, the widow (of Padmanabha) could have been entitled to maintenance only. Had both the sons been illegitimate, their claims, unless some special custom governed the case, which is not in proof, would have been to maintenance only. In this last-named case the widow would have had the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow,"—commented upon and explained. The terms Dasi and Dasiputra, as defined by various writers on Hindu law, discussed, and the rights by inheritance of a Dasiputra considered. The condition that, in order to entitle the illegitimate offspring of a Sudra woman by a Sudra to inherit the property of the latter or share in it, she should, according to Jimuta Vahana and Nilkantha, be an unmarried woman, has in practice been discarded in the Presidency of Bombay. In this Presidency the illegitimate offspring of a kept woman, or continuous concubine, amongst Sudras are on the same level as to inheritance as the issue of a female slave by a Sudra. G, a Sudra woman, was married to T, also a Sudra, by Pat marriage, without having received a chhor chiti (release) from her first husband, who was then living, or obtained any other sanction of her Pat with T. Held that the intercourse between G and T was adulterous, and that therefore the plaintiff, their son, being the result of such intercourse, was not entitled to take as heir even to the extent of half a share, and was not a Dasiputra within the scope of Yajnyavalkya's text, or recognized as such by other commentators. He was, however, held entitled to maintenance, as he had been recognized by T as his son. RAHI v. GOVINDA WALAD TEJA. I. L. R., 1 Bom., 97

284. ————— Illegitimate sons of Jain of Dassa Porwad class—Right to maintenance.—Under the ordinary Hindu law, illegitimate sons do not inherit, but are only entitled to maintenance. Held that a Jain of the Dassa Porwad caste was governed by the general Hindu law applicable to the three regenerate castes, being, though not a Brahmin, certainly not a Sudra, but a Vaishya by origin, and having as such carried this law with him from Gujarat to the Belgaum District. Held, therefore, that his widow was his sole heir, and that his illegitimate sons were only entitled to maintenance. Quare—Whether even among Sudras the widow is altogether excluded from inheritance by illegitimate sons. *Rahi v. 300. ————— Sudras—Succession—Illegitimate son's right to succeed to the whole estate.—The plaintiff was one of three daughters of one S, a Lingayat, who died in 1870, leaving immovable property. The defendants were his illegitimate sons. After his death, his widow, one of his daughters, and the defendants continued to live together in union, and managed the property jointly. The widow died in 1880, and the defendants took possession of all the property. In 1885 the plaintiff brought this suit claiming to recover it, alleging that one of her sisters was disentitled from inheriting by disease; that the other was rich, and that the defendant's illegitimacy excluded them. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim. The District Judge in appeal held that she was entitled to one-sixth of the property only, and the defendants to one-half. The defendants appealed to the High Court, contending that, on the death of the widow, the entire property survived to them. Held that the defendants were not entitled to more than the half to which they succeeded immediately on the death of their father, S. The other half went either to the widow or to the daughters. If it went to the widow, she plainly took it as one

He left his family and his village and went to live elsewhere, taking the widow with him. He had sons by her, and he and his family lived as cultivators and acquired property. K died in his new home and left the widow and their sons in possession of the property which he had acquired. This being so, the brothers of the deceased K sold the property which had been thus acquired by him to one R K. R K thereupon sued his vendors and the surviving sons of K by the widow, together with their mother and the widow of a deceased son, for recovery of the property. Held that the sons of K by the Bania widow with whom he had been living and their mother were entitled to remain in possession of the property acquired by K as against the brothers of deceased who had remained in caste. *RADHA KISHAN v. 805. ———— Joint family consisting of illegitimate sons of Christian father—Succession under razeenamah.—Illegitimate sons of a Christian father by different Hindu women, although by agreement they may constitute themselves partners in the enjoyment of their property after the manner of a joint Hindu family, are not a joint Hindu family according to Hindu law. On the death of each, his lineal heirs representing their parent would, by the effect of the agreement, enter into that partnership; collaterals, however, not so entering by succession, unless the Hindu law gave in such a case a right of inheritance to collaterals. In a partition suit instituted by one of the illegitimate children a deed of compromise was executed by the parties which provided for the mode of enjoyment and against the sale, mortgage, lease, or security of any separate share. Held (1) that these provisions of the deed did not extend to prevent alienation by devise, nor affect the right of inheritance; and (2) that the arrangement between the parties included the right of survivorship, the claim of the State only arising on failure of heirs of the last survivor. *MYNA BOYER v. 810. ————— Rules for succession to impartible estate—Custom—Seniority—Mitakshara law—Nearness of kin—Brothers of whole and half-blood.—In determining the right of succession to an impartible estate, the class of kindred from whom a single heir is to be selected should be first ascertained. Next, it should be seen whether family custom or kulachar discloses a special rule of selection, and, in default of such custom, seniority of age constitutes a title by descent to the impartible estate, by analogy to general Hindu law. Nearness of blood is no ground of preference under the Mitakshara law in case of disputed succession to co-parcenary property which is partible, and it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. Where therefore the family property is impartible and belongs to a co-parcenary family consisting of all the brothers of the deceased propositus, whether of the whole or half-blood, in the absence of a specification to the contrary, the brother that is entitled to succeed to the property is the eldest in years. Thus, when a Sudra marries a woman of his caste, but of an inferior class, as a dagger wife, in addition to his wife equal in caste to him, the rule of selection is in favour of his son by the latter by reason of the mother being of a higher class. A valid custom prevails among the Kumbha zamindars, whereby the son by a senior wife has a prior right of succession to a son by a junior wife, although the latter may be the elder son, seniority referring to the date of the marriage and not the age of the wife. 814. ————— Succession to raj, Nature of.—On the question of the extent to which property of the nature of an impartible raj is excepted from the general law by a special rule of succession entitling the eldest of the next of kin to take solely,—Held that such a usage does not interfere with the general rules of succession further than to vest the possession and enjoyment of the corpus of the whole estate in a single member of the family, subject to the legal incidents attached to it as the heritage of an undivided family. The unity of the family right to the heritage is not discovered any more than by the succession of co-parceners to partible property; but the mode of its beneficial enjoyment is different. Instead of several members of the family holding the property in common, one takes it in its entirety, and the common law rights of the others, who would be co-parceners of partible property, are reduced to rights of survivorship to the whole, dependent upon the same contingency as the rights of survivorship of co-parceners inter se to the undivided share of each, and to a provision for maintenance in lieu of co-parcenary shares. 317. Undivided impartible ancestral property.—Plaintiff, claiming title by succession both as heir by the general Hindu law and according to family custom, sued to recover the Totapalli estate in the zillah of Rajahmundry. Defendant, the widow of the person last in the enjoyment of the estate, pleaded that the plaintiff was not of the royal stock, but merely a dependent of the family; that he had an elder brother alive, and therefore could not sue, and that, in accordance with her husband's instructions, as contained in his will, she was about to adopt a son. She also alleged that plaintiff should have become a party to an appeal pending before the Privy Council from the decree in suit No. 3 of 1860, under which the defendant's husband had recovered possession of the estate from the widow of the prior possessor, J. D. The lower Court found that the plaintiff was an undivided member of the family in which the right to the estate was vested, and a dayadi of the defendant's late husband in the 12th degree through their common ancestor, B. D., and decreed in plaintiff's favour. Pending this appeal, the Privy Council delivered judgment in the appeal from the decree in suit No. 3 of 1860, to which plaintiff and defendant had become parties. Held, in accordance with the judgment of the Privy Council, that the estate was acquired not by J. D., but by his father, B. D., the common ancestor, through whom plaintiff traced his kinship, and has ever since enjoyed as ancestral property derived from the said B. D. That accordingly the question of succession raised in this suit, similarly to that in the appeal before the Privy Council, was determinable by the law regulating the devolution of indivisible ancestral property, which had vested in the last possessor. That the objection to the plaintiff's title as heir by the general law was thus reduced to the questions: Whether his alleged kinship to the last possessor was proved; and if so, whether, according to the ordinary course of legal succession to such property, he, or the defendant, as the widow of the last possessor, was heir to the estate. That upon the first question plaintiff had proved his kinship to the last possessor, and upon the second that plaintiff was heir to the estate, in preference to the defendant, the widow of the last possessor. The sound rule to lay down with respect to undivided or impartible ancestral property is that all the members of the family who, in the way pointed out, are entitled to unity of possession and community of interest, according to the law of partition, are co-heirs, irrespective of their degrees of agnate relationship to each other, and that, on the death of one of them leaving a widow and no near sapindas in the male line, the family heritage, both partible and impartible, passes to the survivors or survivor, to the exclusion of the widow. But when her husband was the last survivor, the widow's position as heir, relatively to his other undivided kinsmen, is similar to her position with respect to his divided or self and separately acquired property. YENUMULA GAYUREDEVAMMA GARU v. to a zamindari which is admitted to be in the nature of a principality, impartible and capable of enjoyment by only one member of the family at a time, is governed (in the absence of a special custom of descent) by the general Hindu law prevalent in the part of India in which the zamindari is situated, with such qualifications only as flow from the impartible character of the subject. The succession to such a zamindari may be governed by a particular or customary canon of descent. The course of succession, according to the Hindu law of the south of India of such a zamindari, where the family was in other respects an undivided family, was held to be that the husband dying without male issue, his widow inherited it. XXV of 1802.*—The question whether an estate is impartible and descends by the law of primogeniture, or is subject to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, must be decided in each case according to the evidence given in it. The result of the evidence in this suit was to show that before and in the year 1802, the zamindar was in possession of the Devarakota zamindari, by right of primogeniture, as an impartible estate; and that he was so regarded by the Government. On the passing of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802, and the issue to him of a sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrari in accordance with it, he acquired a permanent property in the zamindari lands at a fixed assessment, but they remained heritable as before; the estate remained entire; and there was no evidence of any intention on the part of the Government to alter the nature of the tenure. What was said in the judgment in the Hansapur case, 18 Moore's L. A., 1, was applicable here. The estate continued to be impartible, and the rule of succession to it was not altered. It descended by the rule of primogeniture. SRIMANTU RAJA YARLAGADDU MALLIKARJUNA v. SRIMANTU RAJA YARLAGADDU DURGA

even if impartibility was the rule then applicable to the estate, yet the subsequent dealings with the zamindari, the nature and terms of the grants under which it was held after 1802, and the absence of proof of its having been impartible during the present century, also the character of the estate, which was in no way distinguishable from that of an ordinary zamindari assessed to the revenue, all led to the conclusion that the zamindari was now partible. It was clear from the kauliat, or instrument of assent to the sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrari of 25th April 1804, that the latter was in the ordinary form of such grants, and there was no ground for inferring that the Government intended to create an impartible zamindari, or to restore an old one with impartibility attached. In 1835 there was, for a second time, such a dealing with the estate by the Government, in granting it again by sanad, as showed that there was no intention to the effect above mentioned. The case of the Hansapur Zamindari, 12 Moore's L. A., 1, situate in Behar, as to which their Lordships in 1867 held that it must be taken to retain its previous old quality of impartibility after having been granted in 1790, was distinguished. SATRUCHARLA JAGANNADHA RAZU v. 824. ———— Impartible zamindari—Obstructed inheritance—Interest of holders of—Inheritance by daughter's sons.—In a suit to recover possession of the impartible zamindari of Shivaganga, it appeared that the istimrar zamindar died in 1829, and that after an interval of wrongful possession by his brother and his descendants, his daughter established her title to succeed him and was placed in possession in 1864. She died in 1877, leaving the present plaintiff, her son and three daughters her surviving. A suit was then brought by the father of the present defendant, who was the son of her elder sister (deceased), against the present plaintiff and the daughter of the late Rani for possession of the zamindari to which he claimed to be entitled by right of inheritance. A decree was passed for the plaintiff in that suit, under which he obtained possession of the zamindari and retained it until his death in 1883, when he was succeeded by the present defendant. The plaintiff now sued as above, claiming that the right to the zamindari had devolved on him, and not on the defendant, on the death of the plaintiff in the former suit. Held (1) that the defendant's father had not succeeded to a qualified heritage, nor to a mere right of management of joint family property in which the plaintiff had a right of survivorship, but that he had succeeded to the estate as full owner, and had therefore become a fresh stock of descent; (2) that accordingly nearness or remoteness of relationship to the istimrar

325. ————— Impartible poliem—Evidence of impartibility—Pannai lands attached to the poliem—Maintenance and marriage expenses of junior member of the family of poligar.—The step-brother of the holder of a poliem in the Madura district, of which the gross income was about Rs. 15,000 a year, sued him for a partition of the estate and in the alternative for maintenance. It appeared that the poliem had been held on military tenure from the sixteenth century, that it had never been partitioned, and that the custom of impartibility obtained in a large number of similar poliems in the same district. In 1821 and in 1842 enquiries were made of members of the zamindar's family and other persons connected with the zamindari as to the nature of the estate, and their recorded answers showed that they understood the estate to be impartible, and that it descended to a single heir. Held (1) that the poliem was impartible; (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to decree for a monthly payment to him of Rs. 60 for his maintenance. The plaintiff's claim extended to certain pannai lands within the limits of the zamindari: some of which had been handed down from zamindar to zamindar since 1831, others having been purchased by the plaintiff's father. The High Court found that they had been recognised and dealt with as part and parcel of the zamindari. Held that the pannai lands were impartible, and the plaintiff was not entitled to a share in them or in the cattle, etc., used for cultivating them. The plaintiff further claimed a sum of Rs. 4,000, the amount of a loan alleged to have been contracted by him for the purposes of his marriage. It appeared that the cost of the marriage had been defrayed by the bride's brother. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree on this account, although if he had incurred debts for the purposes of his marriage, the defendant would have been liable. LAKSHMIPATHI v. interest therein—Act XI of 1837 (Offences against the State)—Confiscation of property.—A raj estate was claimed by the appellant as the nearest agnatic kinsman of the last Rajah in possession, who had died without male issue, but leaving a widow and a daughter by her, both of whom died before this suit. The respondent, who had obtained possession, under a gift from the widow, denied the claimant's relationship to the Rajah. He also alleged that no title could have descended to the claimant from father to son, as the father's property had been confiscated on his conviction of an offence against the State, and sentence under Act XI of 1857. Held that, as the widow had taken the estate as the result of her husband's having owned it as his separate property, the respondent, whose only title was through her, had not established that a right of survivorship had accrued to the plaintiff's father on the death of the Rajah in 1853; therefore there was no right of that kind which could have been confiscated by the sentence which was passed in 1862. Nor had the father any right of inheritance that could be enforced during the life of the widow, who outlived him. The separation of the estate, as held by the late Rajah, negatived both the confiscation and limitation. The claimant, to prove his title, relied upon a pedigree not stated in any document produced that had existed in the family before this suit. The genealogy on which he claimed was, however, identical with one which his father had more than once asserted, alleging title to two mousahs of the raj estate. The Rajah called upon to answer in proceedings at settlement had not given a direct denial to the alleged relationship. On the contention that there were stops in the pedigree as to which the evidence adduced did not include proof of statements made by a deceased person who had means of knowledge or proofs of other statements within s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), and as to which the evidence was insufficient, Held that the evidence taken altogether, oral and documentary, had been sufficient to prove that the appellant was related to the deceased Rajah, as he had claimed to be, and that the appellant was, as heir to him, entitled to inherit the raj estates on the widow's death; this opinion being founded on the documentary evidence. BEJAI BAHADUR SINGH v. 328. ————— Succession to impartible zamindari—Survivorship.—Heritage to an impartible zamindari is to be traced according to the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of inheritance unless some further family custom exists, beyond the custom of impartibility, although the estate will be in the possession of only one heir at a time. It was contended for the appellant that, in tracing the right heir to the proper stock entitled to the inheritance, a rule was applicable to an impartible estate, different from that applied to a partible one; and that, when once the heritage to an impartible estate had become obstructed, on the death of each successive owner, the true successor was the heir of the last owner of the originally unobstructed estate, though this did not apply to a partible estate. But for such a distinction no authority was cited, nor any principle suggested; and it was not upheld. The parties to this suit, first cousins once removed, contested the right to inherit an impartible zamindari, which had been acquired by their common ancestor, who had left two daughters by two different wives. The plaintiff was the son of the younger daughter; the defendant's father was the son of the elder. The younger half-sister survived the elder, and in 1863 was judicially declared to have inherited alone the impartible zamindari. On her death, the elder daughter's son, in litigation ending in 1881, made good his title to the impartible zamindari, being the descendant in the elder line. Held that this son of the elder daughter became, as the last male owner, the stock from which descent had now to be traced, and that the ancestor was no longer that stock. And held that the son of this last male owner had a title to the zamindari on his father's death in consequence of the full and complete ownership of the latter, who had himself become a fresh root of title. This decision disposed of the only question that was argued on this appeal. But the decision of the Courts below that the plaintiff could not claim the inheritance in virtue of survivorship was also affirmed. The judgment below, on this part of the case, was based on this, that no family coparcenary had existed to give rise to survivorship, as the sons of daughters could not form a family coparcenary, which could only consist of the descendants of a paternal ancestor. MUTTVADUGANADRA TEVAR v. 830. ———— Succession to raj—Grant by Government—Bang. Reg. XI of 1798—Rights of junior members of family.—The land sued for was originally an impartible raj, and by family custom descended on the death of each successive Rajah to his eldest male heir. It was confiscated by Government, and in 1790, when the decennial settlement was made, was permanently conferred on A, a Hindu. A in his lifetime, by his acts and otherwise, showed that he wanted the estate to descend to a single heir, and shortly before his death he made B, the son of his eldest grandson, such heir, and left a testamentary paper in furtherance of that object. The present suit was brought by some of the grandsons of A, who claimed to be co-heirs with B under the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, and contended that the will was a forgery; that A had no power to make it; and that the special law of inheritance ceased when the first proprietor was expelled. It was found from the acts of the Government, and its dealings with the property, that A derived his title by grant from the Government, who had full dominion over the estate. The estate consequently must be taken to have been the separate and self-acquired property of A, and the nature of the estate granted was held to be a fresh grant of the family raj, as it had existed before the confiscation, with its customary rule of descent, the omission of the title of raj in the grant (there being no sanad in this case) not affecting the case, the title of Rajah not being absolutely essential to the tenure of the estate as a raj. Regulation XI of 1793 did not apply to this case, in which the grant was made before the passing of that Regulation, which, moreover, does not affect the descent of large zamindaris held as raj, or subject to family custom. The grant being of the nature found, it was further held that the question as to whether A had by law power to make a will did not really arise in this case, the only person who could impeach the will being the eldest grandson of A, who had waived his right in favour of his son B, there being no inchoate rights of inheritance in the junior members of the family. BEERPETAB SAHIB v. Such a relinquishment is not forbidden by the Hindu law. Where the effect of such a relinquishment is to give the property entirely into the hands of the son, he can during his father's lifetime question and challenge any acts done, and any acts that are alleged to have been done, by his father, and which are denied by the father. LUCHMEE NARAIN SINGH v. When on the death of a polagar, the right of exclusive possession passes from one line of descent to another, it devolves, in the absence of proof of special custom of descent, upon the nearest co-parcener in the senior line, and not necessarily on the co-parcener nearest in blood. See *the ruling of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Tipperah case, 12 Moore's I. Rajah's widow. This relation, viz., a brother of the late Rajah's deceased father, at one time received an all wance for maintenance out of the family estate. What amounted to an attachment of this, according to a subsequent judicial decision, occurred in 1857. Held that he had not thereby been deprived of his right of succeeding as a member of the joint family. The raj estate in question originated in the partition of a more ancient one, with others out of which minor estates were formed. If in the latter there had been descents to widows, no inference hence, to support the widow's claim to inherit in this family, could be drawn. Such minor estates might have been separate (which estates granted for maintenance probably would be), and in that case the widows of the last holders would have succeeded them in due course of law. Unless connection is shown between families, evidence of a special family custom in one is not evidence of a similar family custom in another. RUP SINGH v. BAISNI

Sadu and Mahadu continued to live together for some time after their father's death; but subsequently, owing to domestic quarrels they lived separately, and Sadu was allowed by Mahadu a portion of the family property under an agreement in writing. They were, however, joint and undivided in estate, and continued to be so until the death of Mahadu in 1865. In a suit by Sadu as heir of his father and brother for the whole of the ancestral property, —Held by a Full Bench (WESTROP, C.J., KEMBALL and FINEST, JJ.) that after the death of their father Mahadu and Sadu succeeded as co-parceners to the whole property, subject to the maintenance of B, S, and Darya, if she were then unmarried, and in that event also to her reasonable marriage expenses. —Sadu, however, as an illegitimate son, taking only half a share. Held also that inequality of shares did not prevent co-parcenary and succession by survivorship, and that, as Mahadu and Sadu were co-parceners from the death of their father until the death of Mahadu, the usual result of co-parcenary followed on the occurrence of the latter event, viz., the surviving co-parcener (i.e., the plaintiff Sadu) took the whole property. Rubi v. Remote heirs.—The strict Hindu law of inheritance does not universally apply to the descent of occupancy rights. 15. RELIGIOUS PERSONS (ASCETICS, GURUS, MOHUNTS, ETC.).

353. ————— Ascetics—Succession to property of ascetics—Right of occupancy.—Although the High Court has, under the Hindu law, admitted the right of a disciple to succeed to the effects of an ascetic, it may be a question whether the Court does not go beyond that law when it permits a disciple to succeed to the property of an ascetic who leaves a large property, or any property which, if he conformed to the spirit of his religion, he could not have acquired. But, however this may be, a tenant-right of occupancy is on a different footing from property which is exclusively the estate of a deceased ascetic, and the principles which govern the hereditary right of succession to a tenant-right of occupancy are such as an ascetic, if he conform to the spirit of his religion, cannot carry out. *SOORUJ KOMAR PERSHAD v. 357. ————— Chela.—Amongst saniasis generally no chela has a right as such to succeed to the property of his deceased guru. His right of succession depends upon his nomination by the deceased in his lifetime as his successor, which nomination is generally confirmed by the mohunts of the neighbourhood assembled together to perform the funeral obsequies of the deceased. Where a guru does not nominate his successor from among his chelas, such successor is elected and installed by the mohunts and principal persons of the sect in the neighbourhood upon the occasion of the funeral obsequies of the deceased. Niranjana Barthees v. On the death of a mohunt, the right to succeed to his landed and other property was contested between two goshains. Held that the claimant, in order to succeed, must prove the custom of the muth entitling him to recover the office and the property appertaining to it. The evidence showed the custom to be that the title to succeed to the office and property was dependent on the successor's having been the chela, approved and nominated as such by the late mohunt, and also, after the death of the latter, installed or confirmed as mohunt by the other goshains of the sect. Held that a claimant who failed to prove his installation or confirmation was not entitled to a decree for the office and property against a person alleging himself to have been a chela, who, whether with or without title, was in possession. GENDA PURI v. GRISH CHUNDER PROHURDIO. I. L. R., 10 Calc., 639

389. ————— Condition of mind at time succession opens out—Incurable insanity.—A person is disqualified under Hindu law from succeeding to property if he is insane when the succession opens, whether his insanity is curable or incurable. Under the same law, when property has once vested by succession in a person, his subsequent insanity will not be a ground for its resumption. Under the same law, although a person becomes qualified to succeed to property after the disqualification of insanity ceases, he cannot resume property from an heir who has succeeded to it in consequence of his disqualification when the succession opened. DEO KISHEN v. The father and head of a joint family under the Mitakshara law having become insane, two of his grandsons, acting as committee appointed under Act XXXV of 1858, mortgaged the joint family property on behalf of the lunatic, with the sanction of the Judge. The mortgagee sued upon the mortgage, and obtained a decree against them both in their own capacity and as guardians of their grandfather. Held that the act of the committee might well be regarded as the act of the father and head of the family, and the debt having been contracted for the benefit of the family, the whole family was bound by the mortgage and decree, and that the sale in execution thereof passed the entire property. ABILAKH BHAGAT v. She afterwards married a second husband, not a Hindu, in the form provided by Act 111 of 1872, having first made a declaration, as required by s. 10 of that Act, that she was not a Hindu. Held by the majority of the Full Bench (PRINSEP, J., dissenting) that, by her second marriage she forfeited her interest in her first husband's estate in favour of the next heir, all rights which any widow may have in her deceased husband's property by inheritance of her husband being expressly determined by s. 2 of the Hindu Widows Marriage Act (XV of 1856) upon her re-marriage. Gopal Singh v. The latter part of s. 1 protects any person from having any right of inheritance affected by reason of any person having renounced his religion or having been excluded from caste. This applies to a case where a person born a Mahomedan, his father having renounced the Hindu religion, claims by right of inheritance under the Hindu law a share in his father's family. *BHAGWANT SING v. [6 Moore's I. A., 58]

4. ———— Presumption as to

7. ———— Evidence of partition of joint family.—Presumption.—Concurrent decision on fact.—Practice of Privy Council.—Ground of appeal.—In a suit to enforce an alleged right of one brother against another to separate proprietary possession of a share in joint family estate, the concurrent findings of the Court below were definitely to the effect that a partition had taken place, after which the brothers had been no longer joint as to their interests. The Courts had fully gone into the case on either side, receiving the evidence offered by either party, and they had considered the whole of it. Therefore, it could not be effectively urged, as a ground of appeal, that the Courts below, in coming to the above conclusion, had erred in putting the burden of proof unduly upon the plaintiff, or disregarded the presumption arising from the original state of the family. RAM CHARAN v. DEBI DIN

[I. L. R., 13 All., 165]

8. ———— Suit for share of joint property.—Allegation of separation and exclusion.—

In a suit for partition of joint family property, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiff's branch of the family had been separated more than thirty years ago. The plaintiff proved that the family property was joint, and that he had a share in it. Held that under the circumstances it lay on the defendants to prove plaintiff's exclusion from the joint estate for more than twelve years and an exclusion known to the plaintiff. JIVANBHAT v. ANIBHAT

9. ———— Presumption

—Evidence of separation.—The father and the son under the Mitakshara law are in the position of a joint Hindu family, and where ancestral estates are admitted to exist, the presumption of law is that all the property they are in possession of is joint property, until it is shown by evidence that one member of the family is possessed of separate property. The burden of proof, therefore, is on the member alleging self-acquisition. SUDANUND MOHAPATTA v. SOORJOMONER DAYE

This case went to the Privy Council, but it was decided on a point which made the decision of this point unnecessary.

10. ———— Presumption

—Suit for share in joint property.—In a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to a share in joint properties belonging to a family subject to the Mitakshara law, where a part of the property sued for was admitted to be joint,—Held that the presumption of Hindu law was that the residue of the property was also joint, and that the onus lay with the defendants to prove separate acquisition without the aid of joint funds. the produce of part of the joint property, the separate possession by any member of a specific portion of the joint property ought not to be treated as an exclusive or adverse possession against the other members. HEERA LALL ROY v. BIDYADHAR ROY [21 W. R., 348]

11. ———— Presumption as to property being joint.—As a result of litigation, a decree was passed establishing the title of B as a brother by adoption to L and a co-sharer of his family property; but no possession was actually directed to be given to B except of the zamindari which was the principal family estate. Subsequently an execution-creditor of B took possession of two lots, which were no part of the zamindari proper, the one having been acquired as a separate inheritance by an ancestor and the other having been purchased by L in the name of the priest of the family. Held that B's title to the two lots was the same as his title to the zamindari, and that the burden of proof lay upon those who insisted that the two lots did not form part of the joint family estate. CHAND HURR MAITER v. NOBENDRO NARAIN ROY . . . 19 W. R., 231

12. ———— Waste land—Self-acquisition.—When waste land was taken up and cultivated by the father of an undivided Hindu family, and the question was whether it was family property or self-acquired.—Held that the burden of proof lay on those who asserted that it was self-acquired. SUBBAYYA v. CHELLANMA [I. L. R., 9 Mad., 477]

13. ———— Presumption—Raj—Separate estate.—In the case of an ordinary joint undivided family the presumption would be that the property is joint, but where a plaintiff, though admitting the family is undivided, contends that the family estate is a raj and has always been held by one member separate and distinct from the others, who are only entitled to maintenance, the undivided nature of the family alone on this contention can raise no presumption as to the joint nature of the estate so as to shift the burden of proof from the plaintiff to the defendant, a presumption inconsistent with the contention itself. But if under such circumstances the head of the family alleges that he has made purchases in the name of a single member, and that allegation is traversed, the onus will be on the party making the allegation to prove his case. RAJENDER PRATAP SAHA v. BIRE PRATAP SAHA [W. R., 1864, 111]

14. ———— Property originally separate enjoyed in common.—Where property enjoyed in common by persons capable of forming a joint Hindu family was in its origin separate property, there is no presumption that such property has subsequently become joint property. Bellam Chelli v. 15. ———— Presumption—Purchase of property with joint funds.—Held by the majority of the Court (JACKSON, J., dissenting) that the existence of joint family property being admitted, the presumption was that all acquired property belonged to the family, and that the onus was on the defendant in this case, who set up a plea of self-acquisition, to prove that the joint estate was so small that, after providing for the maintenance of the family, nothing remained to form a fund for the purchase of other properties for the benefit of the joint family. TARACHURN MOOKERJEE v. JOY NARAIN MOOKERJEE . . . 8 W. R., 226

16. ———— Presumption as to house built by member of joint family—Claim to exclusive possession.—Where a member of a family claims an exclusive right to a house which he has built, the presumption of Hindu law against his claim arises only if the family is joint, having possession of joint property. GUNGADHUR CHATTERJEE v. SOORJO NAUTH CHATTERJEE . . . 15 W. R., 448

17. ———— Loan contracted by manager of joint family—Presumption.—There is no presumption that a loan contracted by the manager of a joint Hindu family has been contracted for a family purpose. SOIRU PADMAKARN RANGAPPA v. NARAYANRAO BIN VITHALRAO [I. L. R., 18 Bom., 520]

18. ———— Proof of separate acquisition—Adverse possession.—Where both parties are descendants of the same common ancestor, and plaintiff proves that the property belonged to that common ancestor, and separation between the parties has taken place within statutable limit, it lies on the opposite party asserting it to be divided to show exclusive title by separate acquisition by some ancestor, apart from the right of succession by inheritance from the common ancestor, or a distinct severalty of interest and a clear adverse possession for more than twelve years. BAIKER SING v. BHURTH SINGH . . . 1 Agra, 162

19. ———— Evidence as to the continuance of the joint holding of property—Inheritance and survivorship under the Mitakshara law.—A daughter in the absence of sons claimed to inherit, after the deaths of her father's widows, estate which she alleged to have belonged to him separately. This estate had been at one time in his possession jointly with his only brother, they having been members of a joint family under the Mitakshara. On the death of one of the brothers, who died before the claimant's father leaving sons, the latter became entitled thereto jointly with the survivor. In order to establish this claim to inherit her father's share on his subsequent death, it was held that it was for her to adduce evidence that there had been

20. ————— Evidence—Person claiming a share, Onus of proof as to—Presumption as to property of member of joint family.—The plaintiff as a joint member of the defendant's family sued to set aside a release obtained from him by the defendant and for partition, etc. The plaintiff was the son of one L, and the defendant was the plaintiff's nephew and grandson of L, being the son of T, an elder brother of the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that L and his brother J were joint and had carried on a family business; that J died childless, and that on L's death in 1868 the whole family property passed into the hands of T, his eldest son, on whose death it came into the possession of the defendant as eldest male member of the family, although belonging to a younger generation than the plaintiff. The defendant denied that any part of the property in his hands was ancestral property. He alleged that the property of L was self-acquired, and that L had, by his will, devised the whole of his property, except Rs25,000, to his son T (the defendant's father), on whose death it had come to the defendant. Held that there was no evidence to prove that the property left by L at his death was joint property. It might be that L was joint with his brother J, but it did not follow that they possessed joint property. Although presumably every Hindu family is joint in food, worship and estate, there is no presumption that every family possesses property. Unless there is an admitted nucleus of family property, the onus of proof of the existence of joint property lies on the claimant. The plaintiff, alleging that there was joint property, was bound to make out his case, which he had failed to do. TOOLSHYDAS LUDHA v. PREMJI TRICUNDAS I. L. R., 13 Bom., 61

22. ————— Purchase from one member—Notice of joint character of property.—Presumably, every Hindu family is joint in food, worship, and estate; and this presumption applies in the absence of any evidence of a nucleus of joint property, and even without evidence that the family is undivided. 23. ————— Sale and subsequent re-purchase by member of joint family.—The rule of Hindu law in cases of joint family property (i.e., that it must be presumed to be joint until proved to be the contrary) is applicable to a case where the property has passed by sale into the hands of third parties, and has been redeemed by private purchase by one of the former shareholders. GURGOO PERSEHAD ROY v. DABEE PERSEHAD TEWARER 6 W. R., 58

24. ————— Suit for joint property—Presumption.—In a suit to recover possession of a share of joint property sold in execution, on the ground that the judgment-debtor (plaintiff's brother) was the owner of only a portion, where defendant pleaded that the whole property had been made over by the grandfather, by a deed of gift, to the judgment-debtor.—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the presumption of co-partnership, and the onus lay with the defence to prove that the property had passed absolutely to the judgment-debtor. GOPAL LALL v. BHUGWAN DOSS 12 W. R., 7

25. ————— Presumption as to purchase of property.—When a property is purchased in the name of one of the members of a joint Hindu family, the presumption, according to Hindu law, is that it is purchased with money derived from joint funds. BANER MADHUS BOSE v. SOODHA MADHUS BOSE 2 Hay, 333

26. ————— Presumption as to purchase of property.—The presumption being that an estate purchased by one of several Hindu brothers living in commensality is the joint estate of all, if a plaintiff seeks to dispossess the other brothers under a title acquired from the brother in whose name the estate was purchased, the onus of proving that it was the sole property of such brother lies upon him. ANUND MOHUN ROY v. 27. ————— Purchase made when family is joint.—Purchases made when a family is joint by individual members thereof are presumably made out of the common funds, and for the common benefit. And it is incumbent on any member of the family alleging that a purchase made whilst such family was joint was made out of his separate funds to establish his allegation by proof. HAIT SINGH v. mid with joint funds and for the joint family, which consisted of I and his two brothers, fathers of the plaintiffs. The defence was that the lease was granted to I after the dissolution of commensality. The existence of any nucleus of joint property was not proved. Held that, where one member of a joint family is found to be in possession of any property, the family being presumed to be joint in estate, the presumption is, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of a joint family. Therefore, the burden of proof was on the defendant to show that I had acquired the property separately, and that it was property which could by law be treated as a separate acquisition. TARUOK CHUNDER PODDAR v. JODESHUR CHUNDER KOONDOL. 11 B. L. R., 193; 10 W. R., 178

80. — Purchase by son — Joint funds—Presumption.—In the case of a purchase by a son undivided in interest from his father, the legal presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, would be that the purchase was made with the joint funds. NARAYAN DESHPANDE v. ANAJA DESHPANDE. 1. L. R., 5 Bom., 130

80. — Purchase with joint funds—Execution of decree.—A purchase by a member of a Hindu joint family with the joint funds is a purchase on account of the joint family, and property so bought may be taken in execution for a joint family debt. BHISSUR LALL SAHOO v. LUCHMESSUR SINGH. 1. L. R., 6 I. A., 233

81. — Joint property—Presumption that family is joint.—The presumption of Hindu law is that every family is joint, and that all property possessed by the family is joint. A member of an undivided family may, however, acquire separate property, but the burden of proof lies upon him to prove the independent character of the acquisition. The essence of his exclusive title is that the separate property was acquired by his sole agency without employing what is common to the family. MOONJI LILLA v. GORULDAS VULLA

82. — Presumption as to family being joint—Joint enjoyment of property.—The normal condition of a Hindu family being joint, it must be presumed to remain joint, unless some proof of a subsequent separation is given; and where property is shown to have been once joint family property, it is presumed to remain joint until the contrary is shown; but the mere fact of a family being joint is not enough to raise a presumption in law that property acquired by one member of that family is joint property. Where A, as purchaser, claimed a share in property as being joint family property.—Held that A was not only bound to show that the family was joint, but that the property in question became joint property when acquired, or that at some period since its acquisition it had been enjoyed jointly by the family. SHIV GOLAM SINGH v. HURRYNABAIN SHAW. 13 B. L. R., 349

85. — Acquiescence in property being considered joint.—Certain Hindus descended from a common ancestor, after having lived in commensality and joint estate, separated, no deed of separation being executed or reservation expressed of any kind. About eleven years after, one of the parties to the separation sued the others, alleging that certain immovable property, which stood in the name of the defendants or their ancestor, had remained in the possession of the defendants on the allegation of exclusive purchase; but that it could be proved to have been acquired by joint ancestral income during the time the family was joint. Held that the common presumption of Hindu law in favour of members of a joint family did not apply to such a case, and it lay on the plaintiffs to show why they were silent so long. Where other property was proved to have been separately acquired by the members of the family, it was held that there was no more presumption of joint than of separate acquisition. BADUL SINGH v. 39. ———— Purchase in name of son—Presumption.—When a father and son lived as a joint family, and property was purchased in the name of the son, the presumption is that the property was joint estate, and purchased in the name of the son with a resulting trust in favour of the father. 45. ———— Onus probandi—Presumption.—The mere fact of a Hindu family living in commensality is not sufficient to raise a presumption of their property being joint. 46. ———— Possession as between brothers and sisters in native families—Evidence of enjoyment of income.—In dealing with the question of possession as between brothers and sisters in native families regard must be had to the conditions of life under which such families live, and to the fact that in such families the management of the property of the family is, by reason of the seclusion of the female members, ordinarily left in the hands of the male members. In the case of such families slight evidence of enjoyment of income arising from the property is sufficient prima facie proof of possession. *Fazal Karim v. of money to another brother (defendant) and no receipts being taken for them, and no accountability being stated, leads to the conclusion of the brothers being joint in property and in mess. Per MANDEV, J.—So also the fact of the two brothers being sued jointly upon a bond given by both, and of defendant discharging the debt alone, raises the presumption that the defendant discharged the debt out of the joint funds. HARISH CHUNDER MOOKERJEE v. 55. ———— Separate debts contracted by manager—Presumption that debt is joint.—The condition of a Hindu family is prima facie joint, and therefore property held by the managing member of a Hindu family is prima facie joint; but as there is nothing to prevent the individual managing member from contracting debts on his own account, there is no presumption that a debt contracted by him is joint. SUNKUR PERSHAD v. 61. ———— Evidence of separate acquisition.—The plaintiff sued for partition of certain property, alleging it to be joint family property. It consisted of a house in Bombay and certain fields at Vavla in the Thana District, outside the jurisdiction of the Court. As to the house in Bombay, the first defendant alleged that it was his self-acquired property; that he had purchased it in his own name in 1863 out of his private funds; that there were no family funds, and that neither his father nor his brothers (the latter of whom were then very young) were in a position to contribute anything towards the purchase; that by his invitation his father and brother had lived with him in the house; that his father had died then and that one of his brothers had subsequently left the house and with his family had gone to reside elsewhere; that the plaintiff (the youngest brother of the first defendant) had continued to occupy a room in the house by the first defendant's permission up to the date of suit. The plaintiff, on the other hand, relied on the fact that the house was purchased and used as a family residence, while the father and sons were all living in union; that it was bought in the name of the eldest son (defendant No. 1), who was then the manager of the family; that the father lived and died there; and that he himself (the plaintiff) and his family had continued to live there, even after he had separated in food from his brother (defendant No. 1). Held that the house was liable to partition. No doubt, the onus of proof was upon the plaintiff. The facts, however, proved by him or admitted by the first defendant raised a strong presumption that the house was family property, and against it there was only the first defendant's statement that the house was bought with his own money. But there was nothing to show that he kept a private fund apart from the family funds. He was the manager of the family and he kept no separate accounts. *BALARAM BHASKANJI v. 63. ———— Joint property, Suit to recover—Onus of proof—Limitation Act, 1877, arts. 127, 144.—The plaintiff sued for a share in certain property on the allegation that his ancestor K and the defendant's ancestor R were uterine brothers who, while they were living in commensality, purchased the property in question with their joint funds in the name of R; and that subsequently K left his home, and then his daughter, the plaintiff's mother, enjoyed the property jointly with R until her death, when the plaintiff succeeded to his right and interest applied to have his name registered as a joint proprietor, but his application was refused; hence this suit. The defence was that R bought the property in question with his own funds after he and his brother K had separated; that R, and afterwards the defendants, had been in exclusive possession for more than twelve years; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Held (reversing the judgment of FIELD, J.) that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the property was joint property. Before a plaintiff can bring his case within art. 127 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, it is incumbent on him to show that the property in which he seeks to recover a share is "joint property." OHROY CHURN GHOSH v. GOBIND CHUNDER DEY . . . I. L. 64. ———— Suit for possession of property alleged to have been joint family property—Separation—Burden of proof.—Three brothers, M, P, and H, once constituted a joint Hindu family. After the death of all of them, the descendants of M sued the descendants of H, in effect to obtain their share of the property which had been of P in his lifetime. In their plaint they alleged that the family was still joint. By their evidence, however, they set up a separation between themselves and H shortly after the death of P. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that some twenty or twenty-five years before suit, after the death of M, there had been a separation between the plaintiffs on the one side and P and H on the other. Held that, the plaintiffs having set up a case which was inconsistent with the presumption of the family remaining joint, it was for them to prove that the separation took place as they alleged. *Ohroy Churn Ghose v. 71. ——— Evidence rebutting presumption—Exception to rule of onus in Hindu joint family—Admitted partition or non-acquisition with joint funds.—Although Hindu law presumes joint tenancy to be the primary state of a Hindu family, and the general rule is that the burden of proof that partition has taken place lies upon him who asserts it, there are exceptions to this general rule, e.g., when it is admitted or proved that property in dispute was not acquired by the use of patrimonial funds, the party alleging such property to be joint must prove his averment. So, too, when it is admitted or proved that partition has already taken place, the presumption is that it has been a complete partition, and it lies upon a person alleging that family property, in the exclusive possession of one of the members of the family after such partition, is liable to be partitioned, to make good his allegation by proof. NARAYAN BABAJI v. The purchasers appeared and filed a written statement to the effect that the vendors had separated from their father in his lifetime, and that they (the purchasers) had been in succession to the vendors for more than twelve years in possession. Held that the onus lay on the plaintiff, who would have to show not only that she represented one of the heirs of her husband's father, but also that the land in dispute was part of the estate left by the father at his death. PROCTOR PANDY v. 98. ———— Definiment of shares in ancestral property.—A four-anna ancestral share in a zamindari village was owned by two brothers, in which the share of H, son of one of the brothers, was one-half, the remaining half being the share of the plaintiffs, the descendants of the other brother. In the village records there had been a definiment of shares followed by entries of separate interests in the revenue records, and since 1864 Faali the two plaintiffs had each been recorded as the owner of a one-anna share and H of a two-anna share thereof. The entire four-anna share had been in the possession of mortgagees from the year 1844 excepting the sir lands of which H held separately his own share, viz., 10 bighas. On the 7th July 1888 H executed a deed of gift of his two-anna share in favour of the defendants, and caused mutation of names to be made in their favour, surrendering to them at the same time possession of the sir land. H died on 31st January 1894, leaving neither son, widow, nor daughter, and the plaintiffs were his heirs-at-law. They brought this suit to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the sir land from the defendants. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, and on appeal the District Judge affirmed the decree, holding that the four-anna share was not joint and undivided property between the co-sharers, and that H was in separate possession of the two-anna share of which the defendants were the donees. On second appeal it was contended that, inasmuch as since 1844 there could have been no separate enjoyment of the four-anna share which was in the possession of the mortgagees, the evidence afforded by separate registration could not prove actual separation. Ambika Dat v. Sukhmani Kuar, I. L. R., 1 All., 437, was cited in support of the contention. Held that from evidence of definiment of shares followed by entries of separate interests in the revenue records, if there be nothing to explain it, separation as to estate may be inferred. Joint family property in the hands of mortgagees may be separated in estate, although there could be no separate enjoyment of the shares so separated. Ambika Dat v. Sukhmani Kuar, I. L. 102. ———— Registration of name as lumberdar.—Presumption.—Onus probandi.—Where an estate was originally ancestral belonging to a joint and undivided Hindu family, the presumption of law being that a family once joint retains that status can only be rebutted by evidence of partition or acts of separation; and the onus probandi lies on the party who claims a share in such estate to prove that it is a divided family. The entry of the name of one member of a joint family as lumberdar (the party liable for the assessment of the revenue) on the registry, being for fiscal purposes, is not per se sufficient evidence to establish the exclusive proprietary right of the party whose name is so registered, and the rights of co-partners inter se are not affected by such registration. *CHESTNA v. 107. — Purchase and possession of portion of property by one member—Source of purchase-money.—Where a Hindu family lives joint in food and estate, the presumption of law is that all the property they are in possession of is joint property, until it is shown by evidence that one member of the family is possessed of separate property. The purchase of a portion of the property in the name of one member of the family, and the existence of receipts in his name respecting it, may be perfectly consistent with the notion of its being joint. The criterion in such cases in India is to consider from what source the purchase-money comes. DHURM DASS PANDEY v. SHAMA SOONDERY DEBIA

108. — Purchase by one member—Evidence of want of sufficient funds.—Where the plaintiff, a member of a joint Hindu family, claimed a share in certain property as having been purchased with the joint funds, and the defendant alleged that it was purchased by him with his own funds, and it was proved that the joint family property was not at the time of the purchase sufficient, after supporting the family, to leave any surplus funds from which the property in suit could have been purchased,—Held that the presumption of joint ownership was rebutted, and it was for the plaintiff to show the acquisition of the property with joint funds. The party alleging self-acquisition is not in every case bound to show the source from which the purchase-money was derived. DEUSOODHARE LALL v. GUNPAT LALL

109. — Separate acquisition—Presumption—Onus probandi.—The presumption of Hindu law that any property acquired during the time a Hindu family remains joint belongs to all the members of the joint family does not take away the onus which lies on the plaintiff in a suit to recover a share of the property of proving his case; it merely aids him in proving it. Such presumption is liable to be rebutted by means other than enquiring as to the source from which the purchase-money of the property was derived. That criterion, though the most satisfactory, is not indispensable. Evidence that the property claimed to be joint was purchased in the name of one member only, that after the purchase the members separated, and each member carried on business separately, and that the property was thenceforward in the exclusive possession, and used for the business, of the member in whose name it had been purchased, is evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption that the property was joint. BROHANATH MANTA v. 110. — Receipt of purchase-money by one member—Source of consideration-money for purchase.—The mere fact of the consideration-money for property sold by a member of a joint Hindu family having passed through his hands does not relieve him of the onus of proving the source from which the money came or to rebut the presumption of joint ownership. KOONW BHAWANI DUTT v. KASTURNATH DUTT. 8 W. R., 270

112. — Separate acquisition—Onus probandi—Purchase by one member of family in his own name, but with joint funds.—In a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family to recover possession of certain property alleged to belong to the joint estate, but which had been purchased by the defendant at a sale in execution of a decree passed against the estate of R, one member of the family, for his separate debt, the defendants sought to rebut the presumption that the property in dispute was part of the joint estate by showing that, though the members of the family were joint in food, and at particular seasons of the year lived together in the family dwelling-house, they also had separate dealings and funds of their own; and that, while the family had some ancestral estate, several members of the family had acquired separate property from their own funds, and dealt with it as their own without reference to the other members of the family. They also relied on the following facts as showing that the property in dispute was the separate property of R, viz., that during R's lifetime the other members of the family allowed him to appear to the world as the sole owner thereof, and on one occasion when R. B. the karta, and a third member of the family, entered into a security bond with the Collector, whereby R. pledged this property, and the two others pledged other properties, each of them described the property pledged by him as being in his possession "without the right of any co-sharers." On the other hand, the plaintiff, in addition to oral evidence to show that the property in dispute had been purchased out of the joint family funds, although the purchase was made in the name of R. alone, filed the family account-books and the private account-books of R. for the same purpose, as well as certain letters which passed between B. and R. relative to the purchase of the property. Held that the evidence as to the separate trading funds and property of the several members of the joint family, and their independent dealing with such property, disclosed such a state of things as might be fairly held to weaken, if not altogether to rebut, the ordinary presumption of Hindu law as to property in the name of one member of a joint family, and to throw upon the plaintiff the onus of establishing the joint nature of the property claimed by clear and cogent evidence. Held also that the mere fact that R., while trading on his separate account, was permitted by the other members of the joint family to appear to the world as the sole owner of family estates did not disentitle those members to recover from the defendant, the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree against R., their own share of such estates. *BODH SING DOODHARIA v. 118. ———— Joint funds—Separate trading.—Suit between a widow claiming administration to the estate and effects of her deceased husband as his only legal personal representative, and a caveator claiming the whole family property as an undivided second cousin of the deceased and sole surviving member of the family. The widow asserted a division, and that the whole property of the deceased had been self-acquired by his father. The Court of first instance found against division and against self-acquisition, laying the burthen of proof of each question entirely on the party asserting the facts. On appeal it was contended for the appellant (the plaintiff) that the onus on plaintiff was sufficiently discharged when it was shown that the two branches of the family were trading separately, and that certain items of property were acquired in the names of members of the branch of the family to which plaintiff's husband belonged; that then it rested with the other side to show that there were joint funds from which the purchases could have been made. Held, in accordance with the view of the judicial committee of the Privy Council in Dharm Dass Pandey v. Shamm Soondery Dibiah, 3 Moore's I. A., 229, and the observations of COUCH, C.J., in Taruck Chunder Poddar v. Jodheshur Chunder Koondoo, 11 B. L. R., 198, that such a contention could not be maintained. VEDAVALLI v. NARAYANA I. L. 114. ———— Self-acquisition—Partibility of property given by father to sons—Arrangements made as to enjoyment of joint property. Effect of, on members.—While the members of a Hindu family are found in possession of joint ancestral estate, all property in the possession of any member of the family is to be presumed to be joint, and it is incumbent on the member who claims property in his possession as his separate property to prove his sole title to it. Separate property may be acquired by a member of an undivided family by gift, and the character of impartibility attaches to gifts made by a father to his unseparated sons. What is acquired by the father's favour will subsequently be declared exempt from partition. Separate property may be acquired by the exertions of a member of the family without detriment to the family funds. It may be acquired with money borrowed on the sole credit of the borrower, and it may be acquired by the mutual agreement of the members of the family. It is not necessary for the preservation of the joint nature of family property that the members of the family should live in commensality; they may dwell and mess apart, and yet remain joint in property. Parties who allege that the acquisitions of the several members of a Hindu family are not to be brought into hotchpot and divided per stirpes must show that they were acquired in such a manner as to constitute them separate property and impartible. And it is incumbent on those parties who admit that a partition has been made of certain portions of the family estate, and seek a re-partition of the portion so partitioned, to show that a condition attached to the partition which rendered it inoperative, or that the members of the family have consented to a re-partition of it. The several members of a family may agree to take loans from the common fund, and treat the profits on such loans as the separate property of the several members by whom the loans have been respectively taken. NURSHING DASS v. NARAIN DASS 3 N. W., 217

Affirmed by Privy Council in . . . 26 W. R., 17

115. ———— Separate acquisition—Members carrying on separate dealings—Manager of joint family.—In a suit for partition and for an account from the principal defendant, who was alleged to have been the karta of a joint Hindu family since the death of a former karta, it appeared that the former karta by his will directed that his wife and daughter-in-law should manage his property during the minority of the plaintiffs who were his son and grandson. These ladies applied for a certificate under Act XXVII of 1880, and thereupon as guardians for the plaintiffs granted an am-mukhtarmamah to the principal defendant. In the suit the defendants variously claimed the properties alleged to be joint as their separate acquisitions, and there was evidence of the different members of the family having carried on separate dealings. The lower Court found that the principal defendant was not under the circumstances karta of the family, but held that the burden of proving separate acquisition was upon the defendants, and declared the properties claimed to be joint. On appeal.—Held (1) that the principal defendant was not the karta, and that the plaintiffs were bound to look to the managers first, and (2) that, although the members of the family had certain properties joint, yet the ordinary presumption applicable to a simple case of co-parcenary did not apply. UDY CHAND BISWAS v. 125. ———— Property once ancestral but alienated and re-purchased with separate funds—Recovered ancestral property.—The principle of the Mitakshara law that, if a father recover ancestral property which had been taken away by a stranger and not recovered by the grandfather, he need not share it against his inclination with his sons, was held to apply a fortiori where the property would have been irrevocably lost to the family, but was re-purchased by a member who was at the time solely entitled, and who advanced the money out of his self-acquired property. BOLAKER SAHOO v. COURT OF WARD. . . . 14 W. R., 34

126. ———— Interest of son in joint family property—Co-parcenary rights—Limitation.—A son during the life of his father has, as co-parcener, a present proprietary interest in the ancestral property to the extent of his proper share; but beyond that he has vested in him no legal interest whatever whilst his father is alive. Except in respect of his co-parcenary rights, a son is not in a different position as to the corpus of the ancestral property from that of any other relation who is an heir-apparent of the owner of property. Though the Limitation Act may have been decided to be a bar to a suit by the son for partition, his right as co-parcener has not thereby been destroyed, and it may be that he is entitled to relief against the improper disposal by the defendant of more than his proper share of the property. RAYACHARU v. VENKATARAMAN. . . . 4 Mad., 60

127. ———— Property acquired by litigation—Self-acquired property devised by a father to his son—Earnings of father as mill manager—Property left by testator to be held moveable or immovable according to its condition at his death.—Defendant's great-grandfather (M) died in 1792, leaving a will, dated 1799, whereby he directed his property to be equally divided among his five sons, of whom B (the grandfather of defendant) was one. The property became the subject of litigation, and was not divided until 1862, long after the death of B, which took place in 1804. B's share was received in 1862 by the executors of his son N (defendant's father), who had died in 1843. Held that this property came to the defendant by inheritance, and was ancestral property and was not capable of being given or willed away by him. Further that, as having regard to M's will there was no apparent intention on the part of the testator to convert into money such of his property as consisted of lands and houses, the general rule of law applied, viz., that the property must be held to be real or personal according to the actual condition in which it existed at the testator's death. All property acquired out of the income of ancestral property is itself ancestral, whether acquired before or after the birth of a son. In order to entitle a co-parcener to hold as property self-acquired by him property which has been recovered by his exertions (e.g., by litigation), such property must have been recovered from usurers holding it adversely to the family; the co-parceners must have abandoned their rights; and where such abandonment is a matter of inference, the co-parceners, to whom it has been imputed, must have been in a position to sue. A son to whom his father leaves his self-acquired property by will takes the property under the will, and not by inheritance; and as property received by will is held by Hindu law to be received by gift, such property is self-acquired in the hands of the son, and is not subject to partition. The first defendant was sued by his son for partition. Some of the property in the defendant's hands consisted of his earnings as manager of a mill and of the investments of such earnings. The mill had been established in 1760, and the defendant bought thirty-nine shares out of the ancestral funds in his hands. He was appointed chairman of the company, and managed the mill for ten years without any remuneration. His management was very successful, and good dividends were declared every year from 1863. In 1870 he declined to work any longer without remuneration, and at a meeting of the shareholders he was appointed managing director, and was granted a commission on all sales effected by the company. Held that the commission so received by the defendant was his self-acquired property. Under the circumstances, it might safely be inferred that he did not obtain the appointment of manager by the direct influence of the shares which he held in the company. The gratuitous services which he had for years rendered to the shareholders had influenced them in giving him the appointment, and such influence could not be said to have been created by the direct instrumentality of the ancestral property. In a suit for partition brought by a son against his father, Held that the plaintiff was entitled to partition of the ancestral property as it subsisted at the date of the suit. A custom alleged to exist among the Kapoli Bania caste, according to which a son is not entitled to the partition of ancestral property in his father's lifetime and against his father's will, held not proved. JAGMOHANDAS MANGALDAS v. 128. ———— Profits in business where capital is ancestral property—Profits earned by loans and by commissions.—Four brothers of the Cutchi-Memou community carried on trade with capital inherited from their father. Large profits were made in the course of business. It was alleged that some of the profits were made by means of borrowed capital and some arose out of a commission business in which the capital of the firm was not used at all; and it was contended that such profits could not be considered as ancestral funds. It appeared, however, that the entire business was carried on by the same firm. There were common books, common expenses, and a common staff. The borrowed money was put into the general cash with the original capital. Held that the whole property was ancestral. Augmentations, which blend, as they accrue, with the original estate, partake of the character of that estate.

Moreover, the loans in question and the extension of business, to which they led, might have produced heavy losses instead of great profits, and the family property would have been liable to debts so incurred. The family property, being thus subject to liabilities arising from the loans, was entitled to participate in any benefits resulting from them. MAHOMED SIDICK v. AHMED. ABDULA HAJI ARDASAR v. AHMED I L. R., 10 Bom., 1

129. ———— Wealth amassed in trade — Proof of ancestral quality of property.—Where wealth amassed by an individual in trade is said to be ancestral in the hands of that individual, it is not enough to show that he inherited some property; it must be shown that the property inherited contributed in a material degree to the wealth so amassed. ARMEDSHOY HERIBHOY v. CASHMURHOY AHMEDSHOY I L. R., 18 Bom., 534

130. ———— Property bona fide disposed of before birth of son—Rights of sons—After-born son—Son born subsequently to adoption by father and partition. According to Hindu law, sons acquire rights only in the property which belonged to their father at the time of their birth, and have no legal claim to property of which a bona fide disposition, effectual as against their father, had been made long before they were born. The right of an after-born son to share as a co-partener divided property depends upon his mother being pregnant with him at the time of a partition. The father of the plaintiffs adopted the third defendant. After the adoption, the wife of the father gave birth to a son. Thereupon the father effected a division of the property with the adopted son, and gave the latter a larger share than he was entitled to receive by law. The father married a second wife, and the plaintiffs were the issue of the marriage. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a partition of any portion of the property which fell to the share of the adopted son. YEREMIAHAN v. living against the plaintiff's will, the Court decreed the claim. BALDEO DAS v. SHAM LAL [I L. R., 1 All., 77]

133. ———— Burden of proof where property alleged to be ancestral—Property derived by a son from his mother where it originally formed part of his father's estate.—Where a Hindu by will leaves property to another which is afterwards alleged to be ancestral by members of the testator's family, the burden of proving it to be ancestral rests on the plaintiffs. There is no presumption of Hindu law as to its character. P M., a Hindu, died in 1831, having by his will bequeathed all his estate to his wife P and his three minor sons, A, B, and C, and directed as follows: "In the event of my wife's demise previous to my sons' attaining their full age of twenty-one years to entitle them to claim their respective shares of whatever may be left after marrying, etc., then I direct my surviving executors will secure my property and divide the whole among such sons or the survivors of them." Subsequently to the testator's death, his widow P managed his estate, and probate of his will was granted to her alone in January 1832. In 1836 she bought the V property for Rs. 2,801. There was no evidence to show out of what funds this property was bought, but the deed of sale stated that it was assigned to "P, widow and administratrix of the late P M., her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." In 1845 the eldest son A separated from the family, and gave a release to his mother P. In 1854 she purchased the X property for Rs. 152, the conveyance being to "P, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." In this deed also she was described as "the widow and administratrix of P M., deceased." In the same year, viz., 1854, the second son B separated and gave P a release. The third son C (the third defendant) continued to live with his mother P until 1871, in which year she died intestate. C then entered into possession of all the property which she had or managed in her lifetime, including the V and X properties. In 1879 he mortgaged these properties to the first two defendants for Rs. 12,500. His sons (the plaintiffs) now alleged those properties to be ancestral, and complained that he and the mortgagees were acting in collusion, that he had charged the properties unnecessarily, and that he and the mortgagees were about to sell them at an undervalue for the purpose of defeating their (the plaintiffs') rights. They therefore filed this suit, and prayed (inter alia) that the claims of the mortgagees, after being ascertained, might be paid off. The defendants denied that the properties in question were ancestral property in the hands of C (the third defendant) or that the plaintiffs, as his sons, had any interest therein. Held that the interest which the third defendant C derived from his mother P in the mortgaged premises was ancestral property, in respect of which the plaintiff had no present right of interference. The Court ordered that on payment of the mortgage-debt the properties should be reconveyed to the third defendant, and, in the event of their being sold, that the whole of the surplus proceeds should be paid to him. The original property was to be regarded, as in 1831, the self-acquired property of P M and as having passed under his will. In the absence of any evidence with regard to B, there was no presumption as to its character, and the plaintiffs, who alleged it to be ancestral, were bound to prove that fact. On P M's death, his sons, A, B, and C, took whatever they became entitled to under their father's will as their self-acquired property, but in co-parcenary according to Hindu law, and not as joint tenants according to English law. As to P, she took under the will an equal interest with her sons in the testator's estate, liable to be defeated in the event of her death before the sons attained the age of twenty-one years, when they might claim their shares. On the sons claiming their shares, one share would be left with P, and that share, subject to her incapacity as a Hindu widow to deal with immovable property given her by her husband, would then become hers absolutely. A and B having separated, P and C continued to treat themselves as a joint family, and when P died in 1871, her share in the joint property lapsed for the benefit of C. That share, whether he took it by inheritance or by survivorship, having originally formed part of his father's estate, became ancestral in his hands. NANAKHAI GANPATRAY DHAIYAVAN v. AGRATRAI. . . . I. L. R., 13 Bom., 122

134. ——— Legal obligation of heir to fulfil moral obligations of last proprietor.—In a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, and living joint in food and worship, there was no joint or ancestral property, but the father possessed certain separate and self-acquired property. He had two sons, one of whom predeceased him, leaving a widow. He died intestate, leaving a son and a widow. The widow of the son who had predeceased his father was at the time of her husband's death a minor: she had never cohabited with him or resided with his family or received from them any maintenance, but had always resided with, and been maintained by, her own father. After her father-in-law's death, she sued her brother-in-law and her father-in-law's widow for maintenance, which she claimed to have charged upon the immovable property which had belonged to the father-in-law during his lifetime, and which was now in the hands of the defendants. Held (MAHMOOD, J., expressing no opinion on this point) that the property in suit, though inherited by the defendants, could not, so far as the plaintiff's rights were concerned, be correctly described as "ancestral property" in the defendants' hands, from which she would be entitled to maintenance; inasmuch as, during the father's lifetime, it was not in any sense ancestral, and the sons had no co-parcenary interest in it, but merely the contingent interest of taking it on their father's death intestate, and, in the case of the plaintiff's husband, such

135. ——— Ancestral property - Self-acquired property made ancestral by agreement—Effect of such agreement on accumulations and accretions of the property—Election—Estoppel—Interest of minor members of family in property made ancestral by agreement. M and his three sons T, P, and J, lived together as an undivided Hindu family. In 1881 the youngest son, J, filed a suit for partition against his father and his two brothers. Being apprehensive that his other sons (the plaintiffs) might make a similar claim, M, on the 28th June 1881, entered into an agreement with them (the plaintiffs) which recited (inter alia) that he, M, alleged that the only ancestral immovable property belonging to him was the property specified in Part I of the schedule annexed to the agreement, but that the plaintiffs (his sons) alleged that the immovable property specified in Part II of that schedule was also ancestral property, and provided (inter alia) that, in consideration of the terms and conditions therein set forth, his sons (the plaintiffs) would not "claim a partition of the said property" during the lifetime of the said M. The terms of this agreement were duly observed by the plaintiffs during their father's lifetime, and they continued to reside with him until his death. In the interval, however, viz., in 1886, the partition suit brought by J was decided, and by the decree it was declared that the immovable property specified in sch. I of the aforesaid agreement was not ancestral property, but was the self-acquired property of M. On the 9th March 1890, M died, leaving a will, dated 27th January 1888. By this will he directed that his executors and trustees should take possession of all his property, both ancestral and self-acquired, and, after referring to the agreement of the 28th June 1881, and the property in Part I of the schedule thereto, continued: "Whereas it has been decided by the Court of first instance, and such decision has been confirmed by the Appellate Court, that such property (i.e. the property in Part I) is not ancestral property, yet I am unwilling to disturb the said deed as between my said two sons and I therefore hereby confirm the same." Then, after making some other provisions, he devised and bequeathed to his trustees "all the residue of my self-acquired property," and he directed that such residue, when ascertained and realized, should be handed over to the Chancellor and Senate of the Bombay University to be devoted to the foundation of scholarships. As directed by the will, the executors took possession of all the testator's property, including the property in Part I of the said schedule. This last-named property was subsequently, viz., in December 1890, conveyed by the executors to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs now sued the executors, contending that the properties in Part I of the schedule to the agreement being ancestral under the agreement and will, they (the plaintiffs) were entitled not only to them, but to all the accumulations and accretions thereof, which amounted in value to about ten lakhs of rupees. The University, on the other hand, contended that the accumulations and accretions formed part of the self-acquired property of the testator, and went to the University under the residuary clause of the will. Held (TYABJI, J.) (1) that the effect of the agreement was to make the property specified in Part I of the schedule thereto ancestral property as between the parties to the agreement. (2) That the agreement was confirmed by the will and was binding on the executors. (3) That, although the corpus of the said property became ancestral under the agreement, the accumulations and accretions thereof did not: they were the self-acquired property of the testator, and passed to the trustees under the residuary clause of the will. The plaintiffs had subsequently to the death of M taken possession of the properties in question, and had paid probate duty on them. The plaintiffs had taken conveyances from the executors and had given releases to the executors, and in a previous suit (No. 870 of 1892) the first plaintiff had in his evidence stated that he did not wish to dispute the will, and that he had elected to take under it. Held that by their conduct the plaintiffs had elected to take the properties in question under the will, and could not maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits either under or in opposition to the will. Held also that the sons of the plaintiffs (the minor defendants) were bound by the acts of the plaintiffs. The property in question was not really ancestral. It was only such for the purpose and by virtue of the agreement of 28th July 1881, and the plaintiffs were entitled to waive it or rescind it if they pleased, and their sons could not prevent them from doing so. TRIBHOVANDAS MANGALDAS v. Held on appeal (FARRAN, C.J., and STRAUCHY, J.), reversing the above decree, that all accumulations and accretions to the properties in question subsequent to the agreement of 28th June 1881 were ancestral property, and passed as such to the sons of M at his death. TRIBHOVANDAS MANGALDAS v. (b) ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

137. ———— Property acquired from father-in-law on marriage—Liability to partition.—Property acquired from a father-in-law is self-acquired property, and therefore not liable to be shared in by a brother. BEHARIE LAL ROY v. LALL CHAND ROY. 26 W. R., 307

138. ———— Father's interest in self-acquired property of son—Separation.—The doctrine of Hindu law that a father takes a share in his son's self-acquired property applies only to cases of families in joint estate, but not where separation in estate has taken place. ANVED MOHUN PAUL CHOWDHRY v. 139. ———— Property acquired by member while drawing income from family.—Property acquired by a Hindu while drawing an income from his family is liable to partition. RAMAKRISHNAIA PANDAY v. BHAGAVAT PANDAY

[4 Mad., 5]

140. ———— Property acquired by one member in trading—Education at expense of joint family—Quare.—Where a member of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law has received a general education at the expense of the joint family funds, but is shown to have derived no material wealth from those funds, does property which he afterwards acquires by the exercise of his industry and intelligence in successful trading become joint in the contemplation of the Hindu law? [I. L. R., 4 I. A., 109]

141. ———— Onus of proof.—A, a Hindu, took up some abandoned waste land and brought it into cultivation. Held that the true test as to whether the land was his self-acquired property or not is whether it was brought under cultivation by family or self-acquired funds, and the onus probandi lay upon those who alleged the latter. SUBBAYYA v. SUBBAYYA. I. L. R., 10 Mad., 251

142. ———— Gains of science—Educational family expense.—Gains of science acquired at the family expense, and whilst the acquirer is receiving a family maintenance, are liable to partition, and upon the death of the acquirer form part of the family property, and do not pass to his widow. BAI MANCHA v. NAROTAMDAS KASHIDAS

[6 Bom., A. C., 54]

143. ———— Self-acquired property—Partition.—The acquisition of a distinct property by a member of an undivided Hindu family without the aid of joint funds is his self-acquired property, and is not subject to partition; but the improvement or augmentation of the family property by the exertions of one of the members is subject to division. Hindu law texts regarding gains of science establish it as a rule of Hindu law that the ordinary gains of science are divisible, when such science has been imparted at the family expense, and acquired while receiving a family maintenance; but that it is otherwise when the science has been imparted at the expense of persons who are not members of the acquirer's family. When the Hindu texts speak of the gains of science, they intend the special training for a particular profession which is the immediate source of the gains, and not the general elementary education which is the stepping-stones to the acquisition of all science. Consequently, the property acquired by a Subordinate Judge who had received elementary education at the family expense, but a knowledge of law and judicial practice without such aid, is impartible. The ruling of the Privy Council in Laximon Rao Sudasev v. Mullar Rao Bajes, 2 Knapp, 60, interpreted to mean no more than the law as now settled, viz., that when there is ancestral property by means of which other property may have been acquired, then it is for the party alleging self-acquisition to prove that it was acquired without any aid from the family estate. Bai Manohar v. Narotamdas, 6 Bom., 1, distinguished. Dictum of MITTER, J., in Dhanookdhare v. Gumpul Lal, 11 B. L. R., 901; 10 W. R., 122—that the Hindu law nowhere sanctions the contention that the acquisition of a member of a Hindu family who has received education from the joint estate is liable to partition—commented on as not strictly correct. LAKSHMAN MAYARAM v. JAMNABAI

[I. L. R., 6 Bom., 225]

144. ———— Fruits of elementary education impartible—Earnings of different co-sharers thrown into the joint-stock—Estoppel—Alienation of joint property by manager of family.—There brothers—K, M, and N—were members of a joint Hindu family living at Nagothna. M and N went to Baroda and obtained employment there as karkuns. They had not received anything more than a rudimentary education before they left their family house at Nagothna. K remained at home to look after the affairs of the family. M and N used to remit moneys from time to time for the support of the family at Nagothna. With money supplied by M and N, K redeemed the family house from mortgage and purchased lands at Nagothna, varvatni and vagui. These lands were entered in the revenue records in K's name. K managed the whole property and applied the rents to the support of the family. In 1881 K mortgaged the property. In 1885 M and N brought this suit to recover possession of the house and lands, alleging that they were their self-acquired property, and that K had no power to alienate them. They also prayed, in the alternative, for a partition of their two-thirds share of the property. Held that, the plaintiffs having received only a rudimentary education in their family, their earnings in the exercise of their profession as karkuns were self-acquired and impartible, and that the property purchased or redeemed with those earnings would also be impartible, unless it appeared that they had voluntarily thrown such property into the joint stock, with the intention of abandoning all separate claims upon it. If they did so, the property would thereupon become joint property. Held also that, the plaintiffs having held out K as the manager of the whole estate so as to induce outsiders dealing with him to believe that he had authority to mortgage the whole interest of the three brothers in the property, they (the plaintiffs) were estopped from contending that the mortgages effected by K were not binding on their shares, if K did, as a matter of fact, borrow the money for the benefit of the family. KRISHNAJI MAHADEV v. MORO MAHADEV

[I. L. R., 15 Bom., 32]

145. ———— General education acquired at the expense of the joint family funds.—Held that the mere fact that a member of a joint Hindu family had acquired a certain general education of a not very advanced character at the expense of the joint family funds would not have the result of making all the subsequent earnings of that member joint family property, but they would remain his self-acquired property. *Pauliem Valoo Chetty v. 146. ———— Prostitution.—The ordinary gains of science are divisible when such science has been imparted at the family expense and acquired while receiving a family maintenance. Secus, where the science has been imparted at the expense of persons not members of the learner's family. The trade of prostitution is recognized and legalized by Hindu law. CHALAKONDA ARASANI v. CHALAKONDA RATAN CHALAM. 2 Mad., 56

[I. L. R., 4 Mad., 330]

148. ———— Professional earnings of vakil—Self-acquired property—Gains of science.—Upon the question whether the professional earnings of a vakil were generally his self-acquisition and impartible,—Held by KINDERSLEY, J., that the question must be upon the facts in each case, how far the common family means were instrumental in enabling the professional man to earn the property which is claimed as subject to partition. The fair presumption is that such attainments as are usually possessed by a vakil have been acquired with the assistance of the family means. By HOLLOWAY, J., that the ordinary gains of science by one who has received a family maintenance are certainly partible. Moreover, within the meaning of the authorities, a vakil's business is not matter of science at all. DURVASULU GANGADHARUDU v. DURVASULA NARASIMHAH

(two brothers) was not strictly that of members of a joint undivided Hindu family, since although they were joint as to their general concerns, and in some sense joint as members of a family, yet that relation was qualified by the provision contained in a family arrangement whereby each member of the family might take out and use assets derived from a partnership firm for the benefit of his sole and separate speculations.—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to throw his own and his brother's acquisitions into hotchpot and to claim an equal division of them. The arrangement being of such an extraordinary character as to leave it in the power of each member to draw to an unlimited extent upon the assets of the firm, the Privy Council declined to extend the operation of such an agreement one iota beyond its terms, and were therefore of opinion that the High Court was right in drawing a distinction between pledging the credit of the firm and drawing out money actually belonging to the firm. *NURSINGH DOSS v. 150. ——— Self-acquired immoveables

—Construction of words of a sanad granting an absolute estate of inheritance—Change of ancestral character of immoveables—Mortgage and foreclosure—Bona fide re-acquisition for value by mortgagor's descendant.—A father, being a member of an undivided family subject to the Mitakshara, can exercise full power of disposition at his own discretion over immoveables which he has himself acquired, as distinguished from ancestral property. The immoveables alienated by a father's gift, disputed by his son, partly consisted of zamindari rights in villages which had been at one time ancestral in the family, but had been transferred to satisfy the debts of an ancestor, and had been acquired back by his descendant, the donor. As to one of these villages, the Courts below had differed whether it was self-acquired property in the donor's hands. It had been mortgaged by the ancestors; and the mortgage had been foreclosed under Regulation XVII of 1806, before having been re-acquired by the donor. That the foreclosure and re-acquisition were genuine were facts found upon evidence, including that of prior, concurrent decrees maintaining the foreclosure, as between other parties. Held that the re-acquisition was not a redemption of an estate inherited from an ancestor, and merely encumbered; but that the once ancestral character of this village had been destroyed by the foreclosure. Like the other villages alienated by the father's gift, it was self-acquired by the donor. Other immoveable property comprised in the gift consisted of a malikana payable out of other villages conferred upon the donor by a Government sanad granting a muafi on seven villages to him for life, and declaring that "the zamindars who now pay the revenue will pay it to him, and after him they shall ever pay ten per cent. as malikana allowance to his heir after the deduction of Government revenue for generation after generation." Held that the grant of the malikana was absolute to the one grantee: that there were not two gifts, one for life to the grantee, and the other a distinct gift after his death, to the person who should then be his heir. The malikana formed part of the grantee's heritable property and was self-acquired. BALWANT SINGH v. BANIKISHORI

2. NATURE OF JOINT FAMILY AND POSITION OF MANAGER.

151. ——— Position of manager—

Agent.—The managing member of a Hindu joint family holds a position in relation to the other members of the family and the family property peculiar to himself and not precisely analogous to anything known to English law. He is not the agent of the other members of the family. MUHAMMAD ASKANI v. RADEN RAM SINGH

[I. L. R., 22 All., 307]

152. ——— Rights of members of family—Position of manager—Agent—Trustee.

Members of a Hindu family, with vested interests in their joint property, choosing to continue in a state of commensality and joint fruition, do not possess individually any several proprietary right other than an alienable right to call for partition. The karta of a joint Hindu family in general is the mere mouthpiece of the family, and not an agent with delegated authority in a fiduciary and accountable relation to the rest of the family. As long as a member of such a family is a minor, the karta is in the position of a trustee for him of the joint property to the extent of his share in it, and is liable to account for it to him when the trusteeship ceases. CHUCKUN LALL SINGH v. PORAN CHUNDER SINGH. 9 W. R., 483

153. ——— Agreement between members of a Hindu family—Their estate managed by one in the relation of ordinary agent to principal—Liability to account.—Three brothers of a joint Hindu family agreed that their estate should remain joint, excepting the share of a separated fourth brother, which was excluded. It was in the agreement that the eldest of the three should manage the family estate, and that after twelve years, and after an account rendered by him of the profit and loss, a division among them should be made; any one of them to obtain his share on giving up his portion of the profits. In a suit for partition commenced by one of the brothers and carried on by his representatives, the term having expired,—Held that the true construction was that the above was not a mere agreement to postpone partition, leaving the family status of the brothers uninterrupted, but was an agreement which put them on a new footing. Upon reference to several terms of the agreement, it appeared that the elder had become liable on the footing of an ordinary agent, accountable for receipts and expenditure, and that he was not in the position of the managing member of a joint family liable only to account as to the then existing state of the property. *SETRUCHERLA RAMABHADRA v. 154. ————— Manager, Liability of, to account—Partnership, Distinction between Hindu family and.—The manager of a joint Hindu family is not, by reason of his occupying that position, bound to render an account to the other members of the family. There is no analogy in this respect between a joint Hindu family and a partnership. Where it was arranged amongst the members of a joint Hindu family that the accounts of a banking business carried on by them should be kept on the understanding that the profits, when realized, should be divided amongst the individual members in certain proportions, and that the expenses of each member should be credited and charged in the name of each member,—Held that this was in the nature of a partnership, and an account was decreed. *RANGANMANI DAS v. 155. ————— Suit for account during minority of members.—A managing member of joint Hindu family is bound to render an account of his management to his co-sharers, and he is liable to a suit if he refuses to do so. 156. ————— Suit for account of portion of joint property.—One member of a joint Hindu family sued another, who was the manager, for a moiety of two items pertaining to the ancestral estate, which she alleged that the defendant had misappropriated. Held the form of the suit was wrong, and that the plaintiff should have sued for an account of the whole joint family property. Nowlase Koonree v. Laljee Modi . 22 W. R., 202

157. ————— Suit by a co-parcener for an account of the profits of a joint family firm—Injunction—Exclusion of partner.—A member of a joint Hindu family cannot maintain a suit for an account of the profits of a partnership which is alleged to be joint family property, and an award of his share in such profits when ascertained. This rule of Hindu law does not prevent an injunction being granted in cases in which one member of

The rule which limits the right of members of a Hindu family seeking partition to a division of the family property existing at the date of the division not applying. KRISHNA v. SUBBANNA

159. ————— Suit for share of profits—Suit for partition—Account, Right to.—A member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for a share of the profits of the joint family estate, as he has no definite share until partition. 161. ————— Remuneration for management.—In a suit for partition of family property, one of the defendants claimed to be credited with a sum payable to him as the managing co-parcener under a deed of management to which the plaintiff was not party. Held that the claim under the deed of management was not valid against the plaintiff. In the absence of a valid special agreement, the managing co-parcener of a joint Hindu family is clearly not entitled to remuneration, he being a joint owner of the property which he manages. *KRISHNASAMI AYYANGAR v. —Presumption of debt being on joint account.—Though property of a joint Hindu family is primæ facie joint, yet as there is nothing to prevent an individual managing member from contracting debts on his own account, there is no presumption that a debt contracted by him is joint. SUNKUR PERSHAD v. GOURY PERSHAD. I. L. R., 5 Cal., 321

164. ——— Duty of purchaser from manager of family—Minor members.—A debt incurred by the head of a Hindu family residing together, under ordinary circumstances, is presumed to be a family debt; but when one of the members is a minor, the creditor seeking to enforce his claim against the family property must show that the debt was contracted bond fide and for the benefit of the family. Hannoomanpersaud Pandey v. 165. ——— Liability of members for separate debts of deceased brother—Survivorship.—P, an undivided Hindu co-parcener, died on the 7th August 1874, leaving him surviving a brother C and a son N. N subsequently died on the 2nd July 1875. In a suit brought by plaintiff against C, on a bond executed by P as surety for one E, Held that the family property, which on N's death became vested by survivorship in C, was not in his hands liable for the separate debts of P or N. NARSINBHAT BIN BAPUBHAT v. CHENAPA BIN NINGAPA [I. L. R., 2 Bom., 375]

166. ——— Debt incurred by joint family—Duty of purchaser—Reasonable enquiry.—A person lending money on the security of the property of an undivided Hindu family is bound to make enquiries as to the necessity that exists for such loan. If he lends the money after reasonable enquiry, and bond fide believing it will be properly expended, he is not bound to see to the application of it. The rule is the same whether all the members of the family are adults or minors. Authorities bearing on the question of the onus probandi in such cases cited. GANE BHIVE PARAB v. 167. ——— Debts incurred for family purposes—Evidence of legal necessity.—N, G, and H were three brothers living together as a joint Hindu family. After the death of N and G, decrees were obtained against N's widow, and satisfied by her in respect of moneys borrowed by N and H as the managing members of the family and spent for family purposes while G's widow was living in the family. In a suit by N's widow for contribution against G's widow, Held that, though no legal necessity had been shown for borrowing, the defendant was bound to pay her share, as the money had been spent for family purposes while she was living in the family. BIMALA DEBI v. TARASUNDARI DEBI [6 B. L. R., Ap., 101: 14 W. R., 480]

168. ——— Suit by one member for debt due to family firm—Partnership.—In a suit for money lent, brought by the father of a joint Hindu family who carried on jointly an ancestral money-lending business, the plaintiff stated in examination that he had ceased to take an active part in the management of the affairs of the firm, and that the control of its business was in the hands of his sons, whom he described as "maliks." Held that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit in his individual capacity, and without joining his sons as plaintiffs with him, his sons being his partners in the ancestral business and he not being the managing member or proprietor. JUGAL KISHORE v. HULASI RAM. I. L. R., 8 All., 264

169. ——— Joint ancestral business, Nature of—Partnership—Manager of joint family, Power of.—An ancestral trade descends like other Hindu property upon the members of an undivided family, and the manager of such family can on behalf of the family enter into co-partnership with a stranger. In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the family will be bound by the acts of the manager which are necessarily incident to, and flowing out of, the carrying on of that trade. The manager can pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade, and third persons dealing bond fide with such manager are not bound to investigate the status of the family, minor members being bound by the necessary acts of the manager. By necessary acts are meant such as are necessary for the material existence of the undivided family or the preservation of the family property: and a compromise between co-partners of partnership accounts, and differences by a transfer and division of partnership property, is not such a necessary act, but is one which is left to be dealt with by the ordinary rules of law, and one which must be shown clearly to be for the benefit of the infant members before the compromise will be enforced. The avoidance of a suit to take partnership accounts is not sufficient of itself to render a compromise necessary for the preservation of family property or beneficial to a minor member. A co-partner dealing with an undivided Hindu family is, with reference to its component members, in the same position that a partner according to English law is placed in with respect to his co-partners and their representatives. RAMLAL THAKURSIDAS v. 172. ———— Ancestral trade carried for benefit of minor by the minor's natural guardian—Minor bound by acts of the guardian—Liability of minor for debts.—Under Hindu law, where an ancestral trade descends upon a minor as the sole member of the family, and the ancestral trade is carried on under the superintendence of the minor's natural guardian for the benefit of herself (she having a claim for maintenance) and the said minor, the minor will be bound by all acts of the guardian necessarily incidental to, or flowing out of, the carrying on of the trade. *RAMPARTAB SAMBATHNATH v. 173. ———— Power of managing member to bind members of partnership.—Adult members of an undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Dayabhaga, who have an interest in a family business carried on by the managing member of the family, and who are maintained out of the profits of such business, must in the absence of evidence be taken to possess the knowledge that the business might require financing, and to have consented to such financing. Where, therefore, a managing member of such a family, in carrying on the family business, obtains an advance necessary for the purposes of the business by pledging the joint family property, the mortgage is binding on all the members of the partnership. *BAMOLA DOSSES v. 175. ———— Joint family—Partnership—Infant sons—Mitakshara law—Promissory note, Suit on—Non-founder of parties—Plea in bar of suit.—In a suit on a promissory note executed by the defendant in favour of a firm whose original partners were two brothers, one of whom had previously died leaving an infant son surviving, while the other, who also had infant sons, was, at the date of the execution of the note, sole surviving partner of the firm, Held that a Hindu infant, who by birth or inheritance becomes entitled to an interest in a joint family business, does not necessarily become a member of the trading partnership carrying on the business. There must be some consensual act to that effect on the part of the infant and his partners. Even, therefore, where parties are governed by the Mitakshara law, an infant need not be joined as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the father to recover a trade debt. Decrees obtained in such suits by or against the managers of the business are presumed to have been obtained by or against them in their representative capacity and will be binding on the whole joint family. *Bisessur Lall Sahoo v. H appealed denying that he was a partner. All of the insolvents were Cutchi Memons, and were members of the same family. The firm had existed for forty years, having been established by the great-grandfather of the appellant, and had ever since been carried on under the same name by the family of the founder. The petitioning creditors alleged that the members of the insolvent's family lived together and were joint in food and estate, and that the firm was a family firm; that the appellant's father had been principal manager of the firm in his lifetime, and that on his death two years previously the appellant had taken his place. The appellant denied that he was joint with the other members of the family, or that he had ever been a partner, or had represented himself to be a partner in the firm. Held, confirming the order of the Court below, (1) that, being a Cutchi Memon, the rules of Hindu law and custom applied to the appellant, and that his position with regard to the family property was to be determined by the same conditions as would apply in the case of a member of a joint and undivided Hindu family; (2) that the firm in question was a family firm, and was the property of a family subject to Hindu law; that whatever might have been the appellant's position previously, it was clear that on his father's death his father's share in the firm by law descended to the appellant and his brothers, if he had any. He then became a partner in the firm, if he had not been so already. It was open to him to show that he did not become a partner; but the facts above mentioned being established, the burden rested on him of displacing them, and of showing that he did not become a member of the family firm. IN THE MATTER OF HARGON MAHOMED

Partnership—

Joint family, Member of, starting new business—Presumption as to funds obtained from joint family, how rebutted.—The father of A, N, H, and T died, leaving a gold and silver business, which was, after his death, carried on jointly for the benefit of the family. The brothers remained joint in food, worship, and estate. Subsequent to the death of the father, A and N started a new business in rice in partnership with others. It was shown by the evidence that the profits of the new business were appropriated exclusively by the admitted partners, and A denied that the other brothers had any interest in that business. Held that on those facts the presumption that the new business was started with funds belonging to the joint family was rebutted. Semble—That if the other members of the joint family were minors at the time the new business was started, the eldest brother had no power to start the new business so as to bind the infant members. MAHESU DUTT v. Promissory note by member of an undivided Hindu family—Liability of other members—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 4, 26, 27.—The maker of a promissory note (executed in plaintiff's favour), being a member of an undivided Hindu family, had borrowed from plaintiff the money represented by the note and purchased therewith land for the benefit of the family which consisted of himself (the maker of the note), an uncle, and the sons of the uncle. The uncle had always recognized the debt as a family debt, and the land purchased with the money borrowed had, in a subsequent division of property, been allotted to the uncle and his sons, who had also agreed with the maker of the note that they would discharge the debt. On a suit being brought against the maker of the note, as well as the uncle and his sons, Held per SHEPARD and SUBRAHMANYA AYYAR, JJ. (DAVIES, J., dissenting), that all the members of the undivided family were liable. Per SUBRAHMANYA AYYAR, J.—Even assuming that the maker of the note was not the manager of the family, he was the agent of his co-partners when buying the land and raising the loan, and his acts as such agent bound the uncle who expressly assented to them; also that, inasmuch as the uncle was liable, his sons must be also held liable for the debt to the extent to which they were interested in the family property, and that even if they were minors when the money was borrowed. Per DAVIES

on by one member as manager—Liability of all as joint owners—Ancestral trade and ordinary partnership, Difference between—Contract Act, IX of 1872.—J, the father of the three defendants, established a trading firm in 1865 under the name of J H. He and his three sons lived together as a joint Hindu family. J died in 1872, and the business was continued under the same name by S as the eldest brother and manager of the family. The youngest of the three brothers was a minor at the date of his father's death. The plaintiff sued the three brothers to recover money due on an account signed by S in the name of the firm. The second defendant contended that he had never participated in the property of the business; that he had not resided at the family residence for six years; that he could not be considered a partner of the firm, and therefore was not liable to the plaintiff. Held that he could not repudiate a liability arising out of the ordinary transactions of the firm. During his father's life he was joint owner, and after his father's death he acquiesced in the continuance of the firm under the same name, and ostensibly therefore with the same constitution. He had done no act to divest himself of his share. He had given no notice of repudiation and made no partition, and there was nothing to prevent him from demanding his share of the partnership or claiming to share in the profits. There was therefore nothing to exempt him from the ordinary rule of Hindu law, which makes every member of a united family liable for debts properly incurred by a manager for the benefit of the family. The debt due to the plaintiff for goods supplied to the shop was properly incurred in the course of the ordinary transactions of the firm, and presumably therefore for the benefit of all the joint owners of the firm. The rights and liabilities arising out of joint ownership in a trading business created through the operation of Hindu law between the members of an undivided Hindu family cannot be determined by exclusive reference to the Contract Act (IX of 1872), but must be considered also with regard to the general rules of Hindu law which regulate the transactions of united families. An ancestral trade may descend, like other inheritable property, upon the members of a Hindu undivided family. The partnership so created or surviving has many, but not all, of the elements existing in an ordinary partnership. For example, the death of one of the partners does not dissolve the partnership; nor, as a rule, can one of the partners, when severing his connection with the business, ask for an account of past profits and losses. SAMALBHAI NATHAUBHAI v. A and B were members of a joint Hindu family. Both managed the joint property for the common benefit. Each used to recover debts due on bonds taken in the other's name. In 1890 defendant passed a bond to A. In 1892 he passed a mortgage bond to B, the consideration for which was stated to be the balance due on the former bond. Subsequently A sued defendant on the bond of 1890. Held that under the circumstances the mortgage bond passed to B operated as a valid discharge of A's claim under the previous bond. GURUSHANTAPPA v. 182. ——— Power of manager—Position of manager of family—How far his acts bind other members.—A Hindu family is regarded as a corporation whose interests are necessarily centered in the manager, the presumption being that the manager is acting for the family unless the contrary is shown. Before the introduction of the Civil Procedure Code, this was so equally with regard to litigation as to other transactions, and it was not then obligatory, or even customary, for a Hindu manager to set forth that he sued in a representative character (as now required by the Code, s. 50) or to add the co-owners as parties to the suit (as required by English law). GAN SAVANT BAL SAVANT v. The validity of his charge, however, on the family estate, where there is a minority or non-consent among the members of the family, depends on proof that the charge was necessary, or was believed to be so by the mortgagees after due inquiry. Certain land which was joint family property was given by the adult members of the family to the plaintiff as the worshipper of a deity. A minor co-parcener did not join in the gift. The plaintiff sued the occupier for possession. Held that the plaintiff could not recover. 199. ——— Debts contracted by manager for family purposes—Evidence required where there has been a series of transactions—Onus of proof and presumption as to loans being for family purposes.—Although there is no presumption that moneys borrowed by the manager of a Hindu family are borrowed for family purposes, and a plaintiff seeking to make the family property liable must prove that the loans were contracted for the family, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to show, in respect of each item in a long series of borrowings, the particular purpose for which it was borrowed. It will be sufficient for him to show that the family was in chronic need of money for the current outgoings of the family life or its trade necessities, and that the moneys were advanced on the representation of the manager that they were needed for such objects. And if the fair inference to be drawn from all the circumstances of the case leaves no doubt that the moneys were borrowed for family reasons, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, although he is not able to indicate the particular purpose for which such sum has been borrowed. KRISHNA RAMAYA NAIK v. 201. ——— Power of manager to alienate or charge shares of other members of family—Necessity—Onus probandi.—It is a firmly settled rule of Hindu law, resting upon the authority of the Mitakshara and repeated judicial decisions, that a managing co-parcener has not the capacity to alienate or charge the share of his minor co-parcener in immoveable ancestral property except for the purpose of providing for some family need or the performance of an indispensable religious duty, or except the alienation or charge be for the benefit of the joint estate; and in every case to which the rule is applicable, the onus of showing either by direct or presumptive proof a prima facie case in support of the existence of the condition necessary to give the legal capacity to make the disputed disposition lies upon the party claiming to have acquired under it a title to the minor's share of the property. Upon the question of what is the amount of proof which the law renders necessary to discharge that burden of proof, — Held that where the dispute as to the validity of a sale or mortgage of family property is with the person to whom it was made, and the pecuniary consideration for it has not been advanced for the purpose of discharging an antecedent charge on the property or an old debt incurred by an ancestor, the case of the vendee or mortgagee, as regards the existence of a family need or sufficient beneficial purpose requiring the advance of the consideration-money, must be established by positive proof. But that between a bona fide sale or mortgage for an advance made to pay off a pre-existing mortgage claim or an unsecured debt of an ancestor, and one not made for that purpose, there was this distinction to be observed, that the burden of establishing by direct proof that such prior claim or debt was incurred for a proper family purpose is not cast upon the vendee or mortgagee. He is only required to show this presumptively. But to do so it is incumbent on him to give proof not only of the consideration-money for the sale or mortgage having been bona fide advanced in discharge of an antecedent debt, but also of an enquiry productive of results which warranted his reasonably believing that such debt was a family obligation, and the sale or mortgage a prudent arrangement for its discharge.

Mortgage of joint family property.—Powers of karta.—Acknowledgment by karta or by executor under Hindu will.—Acquiescence.—H, a Hindu, died leaving two adult and two minor sons, and having made a will or anumati-patra, addressed to his two eldest sons, L and G, whom he thereby appointed malik mukhtars of the whole of his estate with full powers of management. He directed them to maintain his widow and minor sons and to pay the marriage expenses of the latter out of the joint estate, and further directed them to pay his liabilities and, if necessary, to raise money for that purpose by sale or mortgage; the necessary documents to be signed by L and G, "the names of the infants being signed by you as guardians and executors." In case of the death of either L or G, the will provided that all the powers of the executors should be vested in the survivor; the minors to have the same powers upon attaining majority. The will further provided that the executors should, when the minors came of age, "make over to them with explanation the share of each," and that the four sons should take the property in equal shares. L died after his father leaving a widow and having made a will, whereof he appointed G executor, and G subsequently obtained a certificate under s. 7, Act XL of 1868, in respect of the property of his minor brothers. Thereafter G, by a deed in the English form, which was executed by him alone "as executor of H" and also "as executor of L," mortgaged a portion of the property to the plaintiff to secure H6,847-2-2. Of this sum, H947-2-2 were advanced to G at the time of the mortgage, and were applied by him for the benefit of H's estate, H1,000 were advanced to pay a debt due from L to third persons, the remainder being in respect of debts of H, all of which, however, with the exception of one debt of H100, were barred by the law of limitation. In a suit by the mortgagee for an account and sale, or foreclosure of the mortgaged property, it appeared that one of the minors had attained his majority when the mortgage was executed, and the other some years thereafter, and that both had been informed of the mortgage several years before the suit, and had then raised no objections. No question as to the effect of the limitation law on the mortgage was raised on the pleadings or at the trial. Held by MAHEST, J., that, although the mortgage was not executed in accordance with the will of H, the younger sons had stood by and had taken the benefit of the transaction, and could not therefore question it. A member of a joint Hindu family is bound, when he comes of age, to make himself acquainted with the acts during his minority of the manager, and to express his dissent at once if he disapproves of such acts. No evidence having been offered as to L's estate when the mortgage was executed or that L's widow knew of the mortgage, the suit must be dismissed as against her. Held, on appeal, by COUCH, C.J., and PORTER, J., the debts by Hindu law being a charge upon the estate of the debtor, and the intention of H, as shown by the provision in his will for the maintenance of his widow and minor sons, being that the family should for a time continue to be joint, no charge or trust was created by the clause in H's will for payment of his debts, and therefore the fact that in executing the mortgage G professed to act under the will and not as karta did not invalidate the mortgage. For the same reason, the clause for payment of debts could not prevent the operation of the law of limitation. The manager of a joint Hindu family, or the executor of a Hindu will, has no power by acknowledgment to revive a debt barred by the law of limitation except as against himself. G as karta of the joint family could not make a valid mortgage of L's share separately from the shares of the other members of the family; his estate therefore was liable to pay the plaintiff the H1,000 borrowed to pay L's debt, and his representatives could claim to be repaid from L's estate. GOPALAKRISHN MOZOOMDAR v. deducible in cases of urgent necessity, from the very fact of the manager being entrusted with the management of the family estate by the other members of the family; and the latter entrusting the management of the family affairs to the manager must be presumed to have delegated to him the power of pledging the family credit or estate when it is impossible or extremely inconvenient for the purpose of an efficient management of the estate to consult them and obtain their consent before pledging such credit or estate. MILLER v. 304.—Mitakshara law

—Ancestral property.—A, the karta of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, living with his two sons, B and C, in joint enjoyment of the family property, took a loan from certain persons, and executed to them a mortgage bond on the joint family property. The bond-holders obtained a decree on their bond, in execution of which they caused the property to be sold, and themselves became the purchasers. C was a minor at the time of the alienation. In a suit by B on behalf of himself and C to set aside the alienation, on the ground that it had been made without their consent and without legal necessity, the Court found that B had taken such a part in the transactions leading to the alienation as made him a consenting party to it; that there was no legal necessity for the alienation; and that, C being a minor, the alienation was not the joint act of all the members of the family. Held that, under these circumstances, the alienation failed to convey to the purchasers either the entirety of the property or any share or interest in it, and C was entitled to have it set aside. In ordering the alienation to be set aside, the Court, in the interest of the minor son, and favouring the equity the purchasers clearly had against A and B, directed that, on recovery of the property, it should be held and enjoyed in defined shares, and that the shares of A and B should be jointly and severally subject to the lien thereon of the purchasers for the repayment of the loan to A. So long as the members of a Hindu family under the Mitakshara law are living in the joint enjoyment of the family property, without having come to an actual partition among themselves of that property, or an ascertainment and partition of their rights in it, no member of the family has any separate proprietary right therein which he can alienate or encumber. The property can only be alienated by the joint act of all the members, express or implied; or, in case of justifiable family necessity, by the karta alone. MAHABHAI PRASHAD v. RAMYAD SINGH obtained a decree against N on the mortgage, and put up the land for sale in execution. It was purchased by the defendant on the 26th October 1876. N and H had previously sold the land to the plaintiff by a registered deed, dated the 30th June 1876. On the 28th September 1877, the plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a half share of H in the land. The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim, holding that his purchase was bona fide, and that the share of H was not bound by the mortgage executed by N to J. In appeal the District Judge thought it unnecessary to consider whether the plaintiff's purchase was bona fide, and whether H was liable for the mortgage-debt, inasmuch as the interest of N alone had been sold under the mortgage decree, and the interest of H therefore was not affected by the sale. He affirmed the decree of the first Court, with the variation that the plaintiff and defendant were jointly entitled to the possession of the land. In second appeal it was contended for the defendant that the District Judge ought to have found whether the mortgage-debt contracted by N was for a family necessity and therefore binding on N, and whether the sale to the plaintiff was bona fide. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The defendant had only purchased that which was seized and sold in execution of the decree, viz., the right, title, and interest of N in the land, and H's share was not affected by the sale. Held also, following Maruti Narayan v. Lilechand, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 564, that it was not competent for the Court in this suit to consider the question whether the loan contracted by N in 1872 was contracted by him as manager for a necessary family purpose so as to bind the share of H in the property. Held also that, if the share of N had already been sold to the defendant under the mortgage-decree, the defendant and H were simply tenants-in-common, and there could be no objection to H doing what he liked with his remaining share. KIRANSING JIVANSING v. Subsequently Sadoba, Raghoba, and Rajaram, the eldest son of Sambhapa, mortgaged the family house to the plaintiff. In 1877 the plaintiff brought a suit upon the mortgage against Sadoba, Raghoba, and Rajaram. The Court of first instance awarded him possession of the house until he should receive payment of the mortgage-debt. In execution of the decree, the plaintiff was obstructed by the widow and sons of Sambhapa, but after enquiry the Court, on 14th January 1879, overruled the objection and directed possession of the house to be given to the plaintiff. On 28th January 1879, the plaintiff complained that he was prevented from obtaining possession of one of the rooms in the said house; the defendant Babaji appeared, and admitted that he had locked up the room, and he refused to give up possession, contending that he was not bound by the mortgage, that at the date of the mortgage Rajaram was not joint with him and the other sons of Sambhapa, and that the loan was not required for family necessity. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's application. In 1882 the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant, in which he prayed for a decree giving him possession of the said room on the terms of the decree passed in 1877. The defendant alleged that the house in question was not the joint property of his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba, but that his father Sambhapa was the sole owner; that his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba and his brother Rajaram had no right to mortgage it, and that the money was not required for family necessity. He contended that the decree of 1877 was not binding on him, and, further, that the present suit was barred. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against the defendant. There was nothing to show that at the date of the mortgage in 1875 the defendant was not still a member of the same joint family with Rajaram into which he had been born. In the mortgage transaction all the branches of the family were represented by their eldest members, and the mortgagee (the plaintiff) might reasonably suppose that a transaction entered into by them and apparently necessary for the common interest was really necessary. BALVANT SANATAM v. To entitle a creditor, obtaining a charge from a polygar on the corpus of the estate, to the security of the estate, proof of imminent pressure or danger of loss, or of such close enquiries as to the position of the estate and the immediate circumstances of the pressure or apprehended danger as to satisfy a prudent and reasonable mind of the truth of an alleged pressure and impending danger, should be given. Per Curiam—Although moneys lent by a creditor to a polygar have been actually expended in payment of paramount charges on the estate, the mere fact of such payments is no evidence of family necessity, nor can the estate be said to derive any benefit thereby, when the annual rents of the estate are more than sufficient to pay for all proper charges on the estate, so as to entitle the creditor to recover from the family estate. When a creditor has made no enquiry as to the necessity for a polygar borrowing money, he cannot remedy the omission by showing that if he had enquired he would have been informed that the money was wanted to pay for Government kist due by the polygar. Per KERNAN, J.—When the rightful owner of a polliam has stood by and allowed another to take and remain in possession of the polliam, and loans have been made to the de facto polygar, the moveable property, purchased by the de facto polygar out of the income or with borrowed moneys in his possession at his death, is assets available for payment of his creditors. Per MUTHUSAMI AYYAR, J.—The moveable property acquired by means of the income of the polliam by a de facto polygar is not available as assets for his creditors in the hands of de jure polygar who succeeded him and who has not admitted his predecessor's title, nor accepted maintenance from him, but moveable property acquired by means of borrowed money may be pursued by the creditor as assets. KOTTU RAMASAMI CHETTI v. 217. ————— Mitakshara law—Alienability by a co-parcener of his undivided share of ancestral estate—Will.—A Hindu of the Southern Mahratta country, having two sons undivided from him, died in 1871, leaving a will disposing of ancestral estate substantially in favour of his second son, excluding the elder, who claimed his share in this suit. In 1861, a suit brought by this elder son against his father and brother to obtain a declaration of his right to a partition of the ancestral estate was dismissed on the ground that he had no right in his father's lifetime to compel a partition of moveables; and that, as to the immoveables, the claim failed, because they were situate beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. It having been contended that, as a father and his sons were during his life co-parceners in the family estate, one of such co-parceners being able, according to the decisions of the Courts, by act inter vivos to make an alienation of his undivided share binding on the others, it followed that the father might dispose by will of his one-third share. Held that under the Mitakshara law as received in Bombay the father could not dispose of his one-third share by will. The doctrine of the alienability by a co-parcener of his undivided share, without the consent of his co-sharers, should not be extended in the above manner beyond the decided cases. The Bombay Court had ruled that a co-parcener could not without his co-sharer's consent, either give or devise his share, and that the alienation must be for value. The Madras Court had ruled that, although a co-parcener could alienate his share by gift, that right was itself founded on the right to partition, and died with the co-parcener, the title of the other co-sharers vesting in them by survivorship at the moment of his death. Without a decision as to which of these conflicting views, in regard to alienation by gift, was correct, the principles upon which the Madras Court had decided against the power of alienation by will were held to be sound and sufficient to support that decision. LAKSHMAN DADA NAIR v. father died and D separated from his brother. At the time of separation D took nothing out of the family estate, which was very small. He subsequently supported himself by practising medicine, which he taught himself from some medical books which his father had bought for him before his death. D had two sons, viz., M, born in 1846, and H, born in 1849. At the end of the year 1850, D and his two sons came to Bombay, where D continued to practise medicine and established a dispensary. In 1852, having saved Rs. 5,000 by his medical practice, he set up business as a merchant, and acquired a considerable fortune. His two sons, M and H, who were joint with him, assisted him in his business. On the 7th October 1882, M separated from his father and brother and received as his share of the property a sum of Rs. 6,000 and jewels and clothes worth about Rs. 5,000. On the same day M made his will, whereby he appointed his father D executor, and disposed of the whole of the portion of the property so allotted to him, directing that it should be invested and paid over to his son (the plaintiff) on his attaining majority; and, in the event of his dying without issue, that it should go to his (M's) brother, H (defendant No. 2). On the 16th October 1882, M died leaving the plaintiff, his son, him surviving. The plaintiff in this suit contended that the whole of the said property was ancestral property in the hands of M and as such came to him (the plaintiff) unaffected by the will. The defendants contended that the property previously to the division was the joint, but not the ancestral, property of M, his father, and brother; that it was property earned by the joint exertions of D and his sons; that at the division in October 1882, the portion taken by M was his self-acquired property; and that he was entitled to dispose of it by will. Held that whether, previously to the division in October 1882, the joint property of D and his two sons was ancestral or not, as soon as a portion of such joint property was divided off by the father (D) and given to his son M, it became ancestral in M's hands. For, assuming the truth of the defendants' story as to the mode in which the whole property was acquired, it could not be held that it was acquired by the equal exertions of the father and his two sons. The father contributed the nucleus of Rs. 5,000, and on that nucleus the property was formed by the joint exertions of himself and his sons. The portion, therefore, that came to M did not represent the equivalent of his own exertions only. It represented also a portion of the father's original capital. The property thus being ancestral in the hands of M, he could not, in the town of Bombay, dispose of it by will, even though it consisted of moveables, to the prejudice of the plaintiff's rights.

plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiff sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court, Held that, under the decree passed against the father, the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for fraudulent or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable. Although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so, yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion. NARAYANAV DAMODAR v. In 1890 D alone came to an arrangement with the mortgagee by which it was agreed that the mortgagee should enjoy the income of the mortgaged property till 1900 A.D. in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. This agreement was filed in Court under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act on 4th April 1891, when it took effect as a decree. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to attach the property mortgaged. D having died in the meantime, his sons objected to the attachment on the ground that the decree was fraudulent and collusive. But this objection was disallowed by the Court, and the property was attached. Thereupon D's sons filed a suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1888. Defendant pleaded that the mortgage was merged in the agreement of 1890, and that the plaintiffs had no right to redeem. Held that the agreement was not binding upon the plaintiffs. By the agreement the right to redeem the mortgage before its fixed period under the provisions of s. 15A of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act ceased, and the right to the surplus profits in the hands of the mortgagee over and above the mortgage-debt was also lost, without any counter-vailling advantage or benefit. Such an agreement by a Hindu father is not binding on his sons in respect of ancestral property. It amounts pro tanto to an alienation by him of the ancestral estate without consideration. Held also that, as the agreement was not binding upon the plaintiffs, the decree against their father based upon the agreement was also not binding upon them. *BALA v. Mitakshara law—Mortgage of undivided share in joint family property—Succession—Survivorship—Decree in suit against widow—Alijoinder—Parties.—On the death without issue of a member of a Hindu family joint in estate and subject to the Mitakshara law, his undivided share in the joint family property passes to the surviving members of the joint family and not to his widow, and cannot be made liable for his debts under decrees obtained against his widow as his representatives. Quere—Where a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, without the consent of his co-sharers, and in order to raise money on his own account, and not for the benefit of the joint family, mortgages in his lifetime his undivided share in portion of the joint family property, can the other members of the joint family, on his death, recover from the mortgagee the mortgaged share, or any portion of it, without redeeming? A suit by a surviving member of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law, to recover a moiety of the undivided share of a deceased member of the family in the joint family property, ought not to be dismissed on the ground that all the members of the family have not joined in bringing the suit, where it appears that the only other surviving member of the family has already sued for and recovered his moiety of the property, and disclaims all further interest, and is joined as a co-defendant in the suit. PHOOLBAS KOONWAR v. Mitakshara law—Alienation by one member of his own share.—According to the law of the Mitakshara, joint family property cannot be alienated by any member of the family, save for urgent and necessary expenses of the family, without the consent of all the members. Held, therefore, where the holder of an impartible raj made an absolute gift of a portion of the estate appertaining to the raj to one of his wives, "in token of his love for her," and his eldest son sued to set aside the alienation, that the parties being members of a joint Hindu family, and governed by the law of the Mitakshara, the son was entitled to bring the suit, and that the alienation not being made for necessary purposes was void. BHAWANI GHULAM v. Effect of introduction of stranger into family—Auction-purchaser—Gift by member of family—Co-sharers, Assent of.—The introduction of a stranger in blood as auction-purchaser of a portion of the rights and interests of an undivided Hindu family breaks up the constitution of such family as undivided, and destroys the character of such property as joint and undivided family property, and a gift subsequently made by the remaining members of the original undivided Hindu family of their rights to a third person, without the assent of the auction-purchaser, is not invalid by reason of the principle of Hindu law which requires the assent of co-parceners in an undivided Hindu family to give validity to such a gift. BALLABH DAS v. AYYABYAMI GRAMINI*

238. ————— Suit to enforce purchase.—The right of a co-parcener to alienate his vested interest in the property held in co-parcenary is limited to the extent of the co-parcener's share in the particular property which is the subject of the alienation. In a suit to recover a moiety of a village which was a portion of the joint family property, and which had been sold by the managing member without the assent of the plaintiff's father, and not for family purposes, the entire village being less in quantity and value than the share of the managing member, —Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed. VENKATA CHELLA PILLAY v. CHINNAYA MUDALIAR . 5 Mad., 168

239. ————— Power to dispose of portion of property by will.—A long course of decisions in this presidency recognize the right of a co-parcener to dispose of his interest in the joint family property before partition; a co-parcener cannot, however, before partition, convey away as his interest any specific portion of the joint property. In a suit by an adopted son to set aside a will made by his adoptive father disposing of immovable property, —Held that the will was of no effect as a valid devise of property. At the moment of death the right of survivorship was in conflict with the right by devise. Then the title by survivorship, being the prior title, took precedence to the exclusion of that by devise. VILLA BUTTEN v. YAMENAMMA . 8 Mad., 6

Held by the High Court that in the present case they were not a release, by the person using them for himself and his heirs, of all future rights of succession which might accrue to them as members of an undivided family. Possession under such a relinquishment was not a new and separate acquisition. No question upon the law of limitation can arise between the different members of the joint family in respect of the property thus held by a single member. An estate so possessed, free from present co-parcenary rights in others, is not entirely at the disposal of the holder for his own purposes. The possessor has only the qualified powers of disposition of a member of a joint family, with such further powers, or it may be with such restrictions, as spring from the peculiar character of his ownership. These powers fall short of a right of absolute alienation of the estate. PAREYASAMI alias KOTTAL TEVAR v. SALUCKAI TEVAR alias OYYA TEVAR . 8 Mad., 157

In the same case on appeal to the Privy Council this decision, however, was reversed, and it was held that the construction to be put on the words was that they were a renunciation by the person using them for himself and his descendants of all interest in the polliaput either as the head or as a junior member of the joint family, and that their effect was to make the polliaput, with its incidents of impartibility and peculiar course of succession, the property of the other members of the family as effectually as if it had been assigned on partition. *SIVAGNANA TEVAR v. family mortgaged some land forming a portion of the ancestral estate. The mortgager, having obtained a decree in 1856 on his mortgage, caused 20 gundas of the mortgaged land to be attached and sold, on account of the right and interest of one of the mortgagors only, on 24th January 1871. In a suit brought by the purchaser against a third member of the undivided family, in whose possession the 20 gundas then were, to recover the same from him, as being the property of the mortgagor, whose right and interest therein had been attached and sold.—Held that the share of a co-parcener, being in the estate as a whole and not in any particular part of it, can be ascertained only by taking a general account of the whole estate, and making a distribution in accordance with the results of such account. In taking such account, however, and in making the consequent distribution, it would be only equitable that the share of the co-parcener who affected to deal with a portion of the land as if empowered to mortgage it should, ceteris paribus, if the purchaser takes his place, be so made up as to embrace wholly, or so far as possible, the land which the purchaser bought as belonging to such co-parcener. Held also that to obtain possession of the land purchased by himself the purchaser must file against the other members of the family a partition suit for the ascertainment of the share of the co-parcener, whose interest he has purchased, as it stood in 1848, and for the allotment to himself of that share so far as it can legally and equitably be identified with the land purchased by himself, and that consequently the suit in its present form will not lie. PANDURANG ANANDRAO v. 245. ———— Alienation by one holder of inam—Right of alienation.—Held that it was competent for an inamdar to alienate a third share of whatever interest he himself had in a family inam, in consideration of services rendered in recovering the inam itself; and that the grantee had a right to have the award made by the decree in the terms of the grant, which purported to bestow the third share in perpetuity. SULTANJI T. 246. ———— Mortgage by a co-parcener—Liability of his share after his death to satisfy the mortgage.—Where a member of a joint Hindu family makes a mortgage, such mortgage, being good when made, creates a valid charge on the property to the extent of his share, which cannot be defeated by his death. RANGALAKSHMI SUBBIA SAPPAL v. be mortgaged by him on his own private account, without the consent of those who share the joint estate. An attempted mortgage by one of them does not create a charge which can have priority over purchases at execution-sales made bona fide and without notice of it; such purchasers having acquired the right of compelling the partition which the debtor might have compelled, had he been so minded, before the alienation by the sale of his share. As to the invalidity of the attempted mortgage, Sadashart Prasad Sahu v. Foolbakh hoer, 3 B. L. R., F. B., 31, referred to and approved. As to the right of the purchaser of the share at a judicial sale, Deen Dayal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 193; L. R., 4 I. A., 247, followed, and reference made to the distinction mentioned in the latter case, between a voluntary alienation without such consent and an involuntary one as the result of the execution of a decree against the co-partner and a judicial sale thereunder. A father and son composed a joint family, holding a share of ancestral lands. The son mortgaged to a banker, to secure a loan, his interest in the undivided share. His father, without having notice of the mortgage, purchased in good faith portions of the estate forming part of the son's joint share at sales in execution of decrees against the latter obtained by his creditors. Held that the son's interest in the portions so sold passed to the father, whose rights therein as purchaser at the judicial sales were not affected by the mortgage. The mortgagor could, in execution of a money-decree which he might obtain against the mortgagor, personally attach and bring to a judicial sale such parts of the mortgaged property as had not already been sold, but not in virtue of the mortgage. BALGOBIND DAS v. NARAIN LAL . . . I. L. R., 15 All., 339 [L. R., 20 I. A., 116]

248. ———— Ancestral estate held jointly by family under the Mitakshara—Sale attempted by one member of his share—Effect of partition—On death of vendor, right by survivorship of other members—Equity of purchaser to have a lien against survivor.—As to ancestral estate under the Mitakshara, so long as the estate is undivided and the share of a member of the family is indefinite, he cannot dispose of it without the consent of his co-parceners. Held that in a joint family a nephew, having taken by survivorship the undivided share of an uncle, deceased, was entitled to recover that share from a purchaser, to whom the uncle in his lifetime had sold it without the consent of his co-parceners and without necessity. Held also that the purchaser could have no lien on the share for return of the purchase-money. As soon as partition is made—actual partition not being in all cases essential, as, for instance, where the family has agreed to hold their estate in definite shares, or a member's undivided share, in execution of his creditor's decree, has been attached—that will be regarded as sufficient to support the alienation of a member's interest, as if it had been his acquired property. As regards members of a family living at the time when their alienation was set aside at the instance of another member, the Court, in Mahabeer Persad v. Ramyad Singh, 12 B. L. R., 90, justly ordered that the property should be thenceforth possessed in defined shares, and that the shares of the members who had joined in the sale should be subject to a lien for the return of the purchase-money. But that case must be distinguished from the present. Here the accrued right of survivorship precluded any such course. The nephew not being responsible for the personal debts and obligations of his uncle, what might have been an enforceable equity against the interest of the latter, while it existed, could not affect the interest which had passed to a surviving co-parcener. MADHO PARSHAD v. 250. ——— Mitakshara law—Mortgage of undivided shares in joint family property—Consent of co-sharer.—A, B, and C together formed a joint Mitakshara family. On the 27th June 1872, A and B without the consent of C for their own benefit and without legal necessity, executed a bond in favour of J and I (defendants, 2nd party), mortgaging to them certain joint properties. On the 14th August 1882, J and I obtained an ex-parte decree on their bond against A, B, and C, and in execution mouzabs Pipra and Bangra were put up to sale on the 16th March 1888 and purchased by H (defendant, 1st party). Prior to the institution by J and I of their suit, A, B, and C, on the 24th August 1881, together mortgaged mouzabs Pipra and Bangra to N. On the 13th March 1884, N obtained an ex-parte decree on his mortgage, and in execution thereof, mouzab Pipra was sold on the 21st November 1884. The plaintiffs purchased the property and duly obtained possession from the Court. In a suit by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the mortgage of the 27th June 1872 was invalid, and the decree and execution-sale upon the basis thereof ineffectual as against them, and for confirmation of possession, and in the alternative that if the mortgage-bond was valid the amount due thereunder and chargeable on mouzab Pipra might be determined, and the plaintiffs declared entitled to redeem upon payment of such amount,—Held that, although A and B had no authority, without the consent of their co-sharer C, to mortgage their undivided shares to J and I, yet as the plaintiffs derived their title from those mortgagors, they were not entitled to recover such shares without paying to H, who by his auction-purchase had acquired the rights of the mortgagees, the money advanced on the mortgage-bond of 1872 with interest, and that the same was a charge on such shares. *Mahabeer Persad v. 251. ——— Alienation to pay off mortgage executed by widow to pay debt of husband—Revival of a barred debt by the widow of a deceased Hindu.—Although a managing member of a joint Hindu family cannot as such revive a barred debt as against his co-parceners, it is competent to the widow of a deceased member of the family, who represents the inheritance for the time being and in whom it is a pious duty to pay her husband's debts, to bind the reversion by a mortgage executed to secure such debts, though they were barred at the time of its execution. Where therefore the managing members of an undivided Hindu family, after the death of the widow, sold family property for the purpose of discharging such a mortgage,—Held that the sale was binding on the co-parcenary. KONDAFFA v. SUBBA

252. ——— Alienation of his share by a co-parcener—His position and rights after such alienation—Position and rights of purchaser—Subsequent death or birth of other co-parceners—Effect on position of purchaser and on right of survivorship.—(1) The alienation by a Hindu co-parcener of his rights in part or the whole of the joint family property does not place the purchaser of such rights in his own position. The purchaser becomes a sort of tenant in common with the co-parceners, admissible as such to his distributive share upon a partition taking place. (2) Such an alienation before partition does not deprive the alienating co-parcener of his rights in the joint family. (3) As the purchaser does not by the death of the vendor lose his right to a partition, so his position is not improved by the death of the other co-parceners before partition. (4) The purchaser like his alienor is liable to have his share diminished upon partition by the birth of other co-parceners if he stands by and does not insist on an immediate partition. Three undivided brothers, viz., S, N, and M, were the owners of a certain house which, on the 1st August 1845, N mortgaged with possession to one A. In 1878, the house was vested in the respective sons of the said three brothers, viz., B (son of S), R (son of N), and K (son of M). In September 1878, in execution of a decree against B alone, the house was sold eo nomine (not merely B's interest) to one G. Formal possession was given to the purchaser, but the actual possession remained with the mortgagee (A). After this sale took place, no other family property remained in which B had an interest. K died in 1890, and R died in 1883, no partition having been made between them and B. In March 1891, B sold his interest in the house to the plaintiff, who in 1892 filed this suit to redeem the mortgage of 1845. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that when in 1878 G purchased B's right and interest in the last remaining portion of the family property, B ceased to be a co-parcener with K and R, and consequently took nothing by survivorship on their death, their shares going to G. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that B's rights to succeed to his brothers' shares were not affected by the sale of his interest in the last item of joint family property to G so long as the latter did not proceed to work out his rights by partition. B became entitled, on the death of K and R, to their respective shares. GURLINGAPA SATWIRAPA GIDWIR v. NANDAPA CHANABASAPA SOLAPURI. I L. R., 21 Bom., 797

253. ————— Sale of land not joined in by all co-parceners—Partial application of consideration towards debt binding on all—Suit for ejectment—Rights of purchaser.—In a sale of land the consideration was expressed to be the discharge by the purchaser of a debt owing by the vendor and secured by mortgage on the land, and of sundry other debts which had been incurred by the vendor for family necessity. In a suit for ejectment by the vendor's co-parceners, who were minors at the time and had not joined in the sale, it was held that there had been no legal necessity for the sale, which was accordingly declared to be not binding on the plaintiffs. It was, however, found that a portion of the consideration had been applied to the discharge of a mortgage debt, which would have been also binding on the plaintiffs. On its being contended that plaintiffs' interest in the property comprised in the sale should be held liable to the extent of their share of the mortgage debt. Held that in making the purchase defendant was, with reference to plaintiffs, a mere volunteer, and could not as against them claim by way of equity a charge on their shares, even though part of the consideration had been applied towards the discharge of their joint debt; also that, if a purchaser wishes to stand by a sale which is only partially valid, he must be content with the vendor's share; and that, if he wishes to repudiate the transaction altogether, his only remedy is by suit against the vendor for the return of the price paid on the ground that the consideration for the same has failed. MARAPPA GAUNDAN v. their shares by a partition suit. In the plaint they stated that they relinquished their shares of the moveable property in favour of C. In a suit by C against D to recover his share C claimed three-fourths of the moveable property. The son may obtain a partition and separate possession of his share of ancestral property, and his share, once partitioned, will be liable to sale. 359. ———— Right of purchaser at sale in execution of decree—Bond fide purchaser.—Although a purchaser at an execution-sale can ordinarily get no greater rights than the rights of the person named as the debtor in the decree under which the sale is held, the effect of a sale in execution of a decree against a member of a joint Hindu family under Mitakshara law has been extended on the ground that members of such a family, other than the judgment-debtor, contesting a sale under a decree, when shown to be bound to pay the debt, for the realization of which the sale has been brought about, are in equity not entitled to relief against a bond fide purchaser without notice. Where the property of a joint family is sold in execution of a decree against one of the members, a judgment-creditor who was plaintiff, and at whose instance the sale in execution was held, cannot claim to be in the position of a third person purchasing bond fide without notice. *Gridhare Lal v. 360. ———— Mitakshara law—Mortgage of family property by one of several co-sharers in a joint estate.—In a suit on a mortgage against a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the whole of the interest of the joint family in the estate was decreed to the mortgagee, who subsequently obtained possession of it. Afterwards a suit was brought by another member of the family, who had attained majority prior to the mortgage, to set it and the decree aside so far as he was concerned, and to recover possession of his share of the joint family property. Held that the mere circumstance of an antecedent debt was not in itself sufficient to bind him, and that the alienation was not good as against him, unless it could be shown that he had either expressly or impliedly given his consent to the mortgage. *UPOROO TEWARI v. decree against the father alone upon a mortgage by him of his right. Held that, as the mortgage and decree, as well as the sale-certificate, expressed only the father's right, the prima facie conclusion was that the purchaser took only the father's share, a conclusion which other circumstances—the omission on the part of the creditor to make the sons parties and the price paid—not only did not counteract, but supported. The enquiry in recent cases regarding the liability of the estate of co-sharers in respect of transfers made by, or execution against, the head of the family has been this, viz., what, if there was a conveyance, the parties contracted about, or what, if there was only a sale in execution, the purchaser had reason to think he was buying. The plaintiffs, who were minors at the date of the decree and had not been made parties to the suit, instituted a suit to recover their shares in the property sold. The debt for which the property had been mortgaged was one which the plaintiffs and their predecessors were morally bound to pay. Held on review, reversing the decision of *Hanuman Sahai v. affected by sale in execution of a decree against his father—Parties to suit.—A family, governed by Mitakshara law, carrying on a trade in the names of some of its members, having become indebted to the defendants in a large amount in respect of advances made for the purposes of the trade, some of the head members of the family executed a bond in favour of the defendants for the amount due, and hypothecated certain family properties which stood in their names as collateral security therefor. The amount not having been paid on the due date, the defendants brought a suit on the bond against the persons who had executed it, and obtained a decree which, however, did not direct that the properties hypothecated should be sold. In execution of that decree, the interest of the judgment-debtors in the hypothecated properties, and in other family properties, were sold, and were purchased by the defendants, who subsequently, under their purchase, obtained possession of the shares of the judgment-debtors and of those of their sons. The decree not having been satisfied by those sales, the defendants brought a suit against the remaining head members of the family to have it declared that their interests in the family properties were liable to satisfy the decree, and that suit also was decreed. Under the last decree, the interests in the family properties of the judgment-debtors under that decree were sold, and were purchased by the defendants who subsequently obtained possession of the shares of those judgment-debtors and of the shares of their sons. Some of the sons of the judgment-debtors in both decrees were adult at the time when the suits were instituted. In suits brought, many years after the sales, by members of the family who had not been parties to the previous suits, to recover their shares in the family properties, —Held that the interests of all the members of the family had passed on the sales. PER MITTER, J.—There is no distinction in principle between the case of an adult son and that of a minor son as regards a son's interest in ancestral property being liable to pass on a sale of such property in execution of a decree against his father only; but if an adult son proves that he would have been able to save the property by paying off the debt out of his private funds, if he had been a party to the suit, quære—whether he should not be allowed to have the sale set aside on payment of the debt due under the decree. *BASO KORB v. Rights of purchaser of co-sharer's interest in joint family property.—When the right, title, and interest of a co-sharer in a joint family estate are sold in execution to satisfy a decree against him personally, the purchaser acquires merely the right of the judgment-debtor to compel a partition against the other co-sharers. *Deendyal Lal v. The family governed by the Mitakshara consisted of father, mother, and minor son at the time of the decree, and the Court below had decreed to mother and son one-third each, leaving one-third to the purchaser. A second son was born, and the mother died pending this appeal, the two sons becoming parties in respect of her share,—Held that on this appeal preferred by the purchaser, the decree should stand, the appellant having got quite as much as he would have got if the decree had been more correct in form, as he had obtained all that he would have been entitled to on a partition without being left to demand it. *HARDI NARAIN SANGU v. the joint family estate which had been hypothecated by P as security for the payment of such debt. R obtained a decree in this suit against J and H for such debt, such decree directing the sale of the joint family estate for the satisfaction of the debt. In the execution of such decree the rights and interests of J and H in such estate were put up for sale and were purchased by R, who took possession of such estate. Held, in a suit by S to recover his share of the joint family estate, that, under the circumstances, it must be held that the decree against J and H was made against them as representing the joint family, and therefore such decree was properly executable against such estate, notwithstanding that S was not formally brought on the record of the suit in which such decree was made, and S could not recover his share of such estate. *Bissessar Lall Sahoo v. The transferee by sale of the decree brought to sale in execution thereof the judgment-debtor's right of occupancy in certain land as a tenant at fixed rates. The judgment-debtor's two sons brought a suit against the purchaser to recover two-thirds of the holding. Held that the right of occupancy at fixed rates in such land was ancestral property,—that is, property in which under Hindu law the sons took a vested interest by birth. Held also that, as the decree was not one to satisfy which the family property could be sold, being a mere money-decree against the father personally, and for a debt which it was not the duty of the sons to pay, and as the purchaser was bound to have satisfied himself as to whether the family property was liable to be sold in satisfaction of the decree, the purchaser could not, on the principles laid down in *Girihares Lal v. father—Co-sharers—Sale of minor's share—Right of purchaser.—Plaintiff's father (first defendant) borrowed money to enable him to sue for the recovery of certain lands, and being unable to repay it, judgment was obtained against him, and the lands in suit were sold and purchased at the Court sale by the fourteenth defendant. Plaintiff brought the present suit to set aside the sale of one-half of those lands on the ground that they formed his share, that he was a minor when his father incurred the debt, and that his share was not liable for debts incurred by his father. The Munsif gave a decree in favour of plaintiff. The fourteenth defendant appealed. The District Judge reversed the Munsif's decree. On special appeal by the plaintiff,—Held that, as the debt was the first defendant's personal debt, and the decree was against him personally, only his rights and interest in the property could be sold, and nothing beyond his rights would pass to the purchaser. *Deendyal Lal v. 271. ———— Mortgage by father—Minor's interests.—The plaintiffs, minors, by their mother, as next friend and guardian, sued defendants, sons of one S D, under s. 230 of Act VIII of 1839, to recover a four-fifths share of a house and lands of which plaintiffs were dispossessed by the defendants in the execution of the decree in a suit, No. 33 of 1872. The facts were that in a suit, No. 28 of 1871, a decree for money due under a mortgage-bond was passed against S D, the father of the present defendants, and in execution of the decree certain immovable property was attached. The sons of S D came forward and put in a claim to the property and applied for the release of the attachment. The claim was disallowed. The sons, being dissatisfied with the order disallowing their claim, brought suit No. 33 of 1872, in which they prayed for a partition, and that their four-fifths share might be released from attachment. Prior to that suit, the attached property had been sold, but the sale was limited to the right, title, and interest of the father in the joint property; however, in suit No. 33 of 1872, the Court, having decreed a partition, further entertained the question as between the sons and the creditor of the father "whether the attachment of the rest of the family property specified in the plaint ought not, in respect of plaintiff's shares, to be cancelled," and decided it in favour of the creditor on the ground that the debt had been contracted for purposes binding on the family, and further decided that the property so under attachment ought to be sold to discharge the debt, and it was sold accordingly. Subsequently to the decree for partition, and when the defendants were divided from their father, S D (who was the sole judgment-debtor in suit No. 28 of 1871), the house and lands now in issue, which formed no part of the property mortgaged for the debt, the subject of suit No. 28 of 1871, were attached and sold and bought by the father of the present plaintiffs. The question in the present suits was whether the properties last mentioned, not having been attached in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, and not therefore being any of those specifically affected in favour of the creditor by the decree in suit No. 33 of 1872, were liable as part of the joint family property, under the declarations of the judgment in that suit, to discharge the debt due to the creditor of the father by the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871. Held on this question by the High Court (MORGAN, C.J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, JJ.), affirming the decree of the Court of first instance, that those properties were not so liable; that under the decree and execution-proceedings in suit No. 28 of 1871 merely the rights of S D were sold; that nothing in that litigation indicated that it was intended to enforce the debt against the whole property as a debt due from the family, and that the decision in the partition suit (No. 33 of 1872) covered only what was then in question, and could not be viewed as authorizing the attachment of the items of property now in question in execution of that decree. That the present suits were therefore rightly dismissed. By INNES, J.—That the prayer of the plaintiffs (the sons) in suit No. 33 of 1872, so far as it related to the removal of the attachment in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, should have been at once granted. That the creditor in suit No. 28 of 1871 had elected to sue the father alone, and that, though it might have been open to him (the creditor) to have so framed his suit as to have obtained a decree making the joint family liable in persons and property, having failed to do so, he could not afterwards seek to extend the operation of the decree beyond the proper and limited scope of it; and that the Court, in trying the question of the liability of the sons to discharge the debt due to the first defendant's creditor, in effect instituted against them a new suit. Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198, followed. The authorities reviewed on the question whether in execution of a decree the interests of any but those who were actual parties to it, or those who, on the death of such parties, became their representatives in interest, could be affected. *VENKATARAMAYYAN v. This land had been mortgaged to one B, to whom the father and son were also liable on a separate money-bond. H, being pressed by his creditors, left his village and remained away for some years. During his father's absence, J, being pressed for payment of his debts, compromised B's entire claim for Rs200, which he obtained on loan from the plaintiff, to whom he gave as security a mortgage with possession of the land in question. The plaintiff continued in possession until he was dispossessed by defendant No. 2, who claimed to be purchaser of the land at a sale held in execution of a money-decree obtained by defendant No. 1 against H. The plaintiff now brought the present suit against the defendants, praying that either he should be restored to the possession of the lands or that the sum of Rs200, which he had advanced to J, should be decreed to be paid by the defendants. Both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, Held that the plaintiff's claim to be regarded as a mortgage of the entire property could not be allowed. The temporary absence of his father, H, owing to the pressure of his creditors, could confer no legal authority on J to take upon himself to mortgage the family property. He had not been authorized by his father, nor did he assume to act for him when he mortgaged the property. The mortgage to the plaintiff was therefore to be regarded as the act of J in his individual capacity, and as such could receive no ratification by the mere reticence of his father. The plaintiff, however, having been in possession, was entitled, if he could establish his title to a lien on J's share, to be put into possession jointly with the defendant if the latter's title was proved.

Joint and undivided property—Debts of deceased member—Liability of his interest.—J, a member of a joint Hindu family, left two sons, R and S. B, the grandson of R, thereupon sued the purchaser to recover the same, on the ground that it was the joint property of S and himself, and could not be attached and sold in satisfaction of S's debt. Held that, on the death of S, his interest passed to the plaintiff by survivorship, and was not liable after his death to any personal debt he had incurred, inasmuch as no charge had been made on the property, and the creditor could not recover his money from the joint property after the death of S when he had not obtained judgment against S, and taken out execution by attachment against him. *Suraj Bansi Koor v. Where therefore a Hindu, undivided in estate from his father, died separately indebted to the plaintiffs, who obtained a decree against the father and wife of the deceased, as his legal heirs and representatives, to recover, from the estate and effects of the deceased, the amount of their debt and costs, and sought, in satisfaction of the decree, to attach a shop which during the lifetime of the deceased and subsequently to his death had been in the possession of his father, there being no proof of any separate estate of the deceased having devolved upon his father,—Held that, though the son was, during his life, jointly interested with his father in the shop as being ancestral property, his right had come into existence at his birth and died with him, and therefore the plaintiffs could not render the shop available for their claim. In the Bombay Presidency, the share of one of the co-parceners in a Hindu undivided family in the ancestral estate may, before partition, be seized and sold in execution for his separate debt in his lifetime. Such a co-parcener cannot, however, by simple voluntary gift or by devise, alienate his share to a stranger, so as to bind his surviving co-parceners after his decease. The purchaser, mortgagee, or other alienee, for valuable consideration, of such an unascertained share, cannot, before partition, insist upon the possession of any particular portion of the undivided family estate. The mortgagee or purchaser of a share in the undivided ancestral estate of a Hindu family takes such share subject to the prior charges or encumbrances affecting the family estate or that particular share. If the mortgage or sale be of a special portion of the family property, and possession of such portion can, on partition, be given to the mortgagee or purchaser, without injustice to prior encumbrancers or to co-parceners, it is the duty of the Court making the partition to give effect to the mortgage or sale, and so to marshal the family property among the co-parceners as to allot that portion, or so much of it as may be just, to the mortgagee or purchaser. Quere—Whether, in the event of it being impossible, consistently with the rights of others, to give possession of the portion mortgaged or sold to the mortgagee or purchaser, he would be entitled to be recouped out of such other portion as might, on partition, be allotted to the parcener whose share in the special portion had been mortgaged or sold. The attachment of a parcener's share in the family property under an ordinary money-decree should go against the share, right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in such parts of the family property (naming and describing them) as the judgment-creditor can specify, and against his share, right, title, and interest in all other parts of the family property. *Kalyanbhai v. in joint family property—Right of purchaser—Right of parceners to partition.—The purchaser at a Court's sale of the right, title, and interest of one of the co-parceners in the undivided estate, by his certificate, under s. 259 of the Civil Procedure Code, can take no more than the interest of such co-parcener in the property disposed of, as a member of the united family. Course pointed out as to the ascertainment of what that interest is, and how the transaction can be made good for the benefit of the purchaser of a co-parcener's interest in a particular piece of property forming only a part of the common estate. Where, however, the purchaser got into possession and held it with such an accompanying right as the judgment-debtor could transfer to him.—Held that the purchaser was in as a tenant-in-common with the judgment-debtor's co-parceners, and that they were entitled to possession in common with him, and might enforce their right for a share of the enjoyment, or for a definition of the portions in which each party in future was to have a sole interest. Such co-parceners, however, are not entitled to eject the purchaser wholly from a defined moiety of any particular portion of the joint property. MAHABALAYA DIN PARMAYA v. 285. ———— Alienation of joint family property—Mortgage by manager—Decree against manager—Sale in execution of decree.—G, the brother of the plaintiff, executed a mortgage to the defendant during the plaintiff's minority. The deed recited that the money was borrowed to pay off a family debt, and to defray family expenses. The defendant sued G on the mortgage, and obtained a decree. A house, which was part of the family property, was sold in execution, and was purchased by the defendant himself. The plaintiff sued to have the sale set aside, and to recover his half share in the house. Held that the defendant was not entitled to hold the plaintiff's share in the property by virtue of the sale to him under the decree obtained against G alone. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into possession of the whole house, the defendant being left to his remedy by a suit for partition. The plaintiff, however, having claimed only the restoration of his half share, the decree was limited accordingly. Held also that it was not competent for the Court in this suit to go into the question whether the mortgage by G was binding on the minor plaintiff. MAHUTI NARAYAN v. Nor when the judgment-creditor proceeds to sale in execution of such decree against the family property does the sale of the father's "right, title, and interest" pass any more than the father's interest to be ascertained generally by a partition with his sons. BABAJI v. So also, where family property is sold under proceedings taken against the father alone, the son's interest is bound, unless the son can show that the sale was on account of an obligation to which he was not subject. The father is, in fact, the representative of the family both in transactions and in suits, subject only to the right of the sons to prevent an entire dissipation of the estate by particular instances of wrong-doing on the father's part. JAGANNATH LADUSHAJI v. The proclamation of sale purported to relate to (a) only;

and between the dates of proclamation and the auction-sale the zamindar died. Or the argument that, this having given rise to an ambiguity, the Court must be understood to have sold all that it could sell, and that under the circumstances it could sell, and was bound to sell; (b) because the debts, the subject of the decrees under execution, not having been incurred by the late zamindar for any immoral purpose, the entire zamindari formed assets for their payment in the hands of his son. Held that the question of what the Court could, or should, have sold had not arisen. All that required decision was what the Court had sold. If (a) only was put up for sale, then that interest only could have been purchased. Two Courts having concurred in finding that (a) only was sold, in which also their Lordships agreed, only that interest passed to the purchaser. PETTACHI CHETTIAR v. B having sued A personally for the amount due, A admitted the mortgage and said he would surrender the property in discharge of the debt, and a decree was passed accordingly. A's undivided brothers intervened in execution. Held that the decree, not being passed against the joint family or its representative, and not describing the property, which it directed to be delivered to the plaintiff by way of absolute sale to be family property, could not be executed against the family property. GURUBAPPA v. In 1864, S being then dead, the defendant sued R, the son of S, to recover the money-debt, and obtained a decree against the estate of the deceased. The land in question was thereupon attached and sold on the 18th August 1873 subject to defendant's mortgage lien, and was purchased for the defendant by his cousin. The certificate of sale was drawn up in accordance with the decree, and recited that the purchaser bought the whole right, title, and interest of S. On the 3rd August 1882, the plaintiff purchased from R's sons the share of R in S's estate. The plaintiff sued the defendant to redeem the property. The Court of first instance rejected his claim. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court reversed that decree, and remanded the case for re-trial. Against this order of remand, the defendant appealed to the High Court. Held, restoring the decree of the Court of first instance, that the language of the decree showed that the intention was to make the land itself liable for the debt, and not merely S's interest. Subsequently B brought a suit on the mortgage against K by his heir, R, for the amount due, and obtained a decree whereby it was ordered that the amount should be recovered from the mortgaged property, and if that proved insufficient, from the other estate of the deceased. The minor sons were not made parties to that suit, nor was R sued as representing the joint family. In execution of the decree, B attached and sold the whole of the joint family property, the certificate of sale showing that the right, title, and interest of K, deceased, by his heir R, was attached and sold and conveyed to the purchaser. The three minor sons subsequently brought this suit to recover some of the property, contending that their shares were not bound by the sale. Held on the authority of Bussessor Lall Sahoo v. Luckmeswar Singh, L. R., 6 I. A., 233, and reversing the decree of the lower Court, that the property in question having been declared liable for the debt incurred by the father, the intention was that the estate in its entirety should be sold. The minor sons were therefore bound by the sale, unless they could prove that the father's debt had been incurred for an immoral and improper purpose. The case was accordingly sent back for trial of an issue upon that point, with a direction that the burden of proof should lie upon the plaintiffs. JAIRAM BAJABASHET v. JOMA KONDIA. I. L. 204. ————— Mortgage of family property by father—Decree against father enforcing mortgage—Decree for money against father—Sale in execution of decree—Rights of sons.—The members of a joint Hindu family brought suits in which they respectively prayed for decrees that their respective proprietary rights in certain ancestral property might be declared, and that their interests in such property, which were about to be sold in execution of two decrees against their father, might be exempted from such sale. One of these decrees was for enforcement of a hypothecation by the plaintiff's father of the property in suit. It was admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs in connection with this decree that, although the judgment-debtor was a person of immoral character, the creditor had no means of knowing that the moneys advanced by him were likely to be applied to any other purpose than that for which they were professedly borrowed, namely, for the purpose of an indigo factory in which the family had an interest. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any declaration in respect of the execution-proceedings under the decree for enforcement of hypothecation. The second of the decrees above referred to was a simple money-decree for the principal and interest due upon a hundi executed by the father in favour of the decree-holder. The suit terminating in that decree was brought against the father alone, and the debt was treated as his separate debt. Held that the creditor's remedy was to have brought his suit, if he desired to obtain a decree which he could execute against the family property and not against the father's interest only, and if he could maintain such suit, either against those members of the family against whom he desired to execute his decree, or against the father as head of the family, expressly or impliedly, suing him in that capacity; but that, not having taken this course, his decree was not enforceable against the plaintiff's rights and interests in the attached property. *Muttayan Chettiar v. he is liable to be compelled to restore to the other members of the joint family their interests, which had not, upon the face of the sale-certificate, passed by the sale. The father and manager of a joint Hindu family executed a deed whereby he hypothecated certain zamindari property, covenanting to put the mortgagee in proprietary possession thereof if the debt should not be paid on a certain date. This transaction afterwards turned out to be fraudulent on his part, as he had no interest in this property, and the obligors then sued him to recover the debt upon the personal obligation and obtained a money-decree, in execution whereof the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in certain joint family property was notified for sale, and a sale took place at which, upon the face of the sale-certificate, only that right, title, and interest was sold. The auction-purchasers, having obtained possession, asserted a right to the whole of the joint family estate, upon the ground that, as the judgment-debtor was father of the family, the decree must be assumed to have been passed against him in his capacity as karta, and that the other members of the family were therefore bound by the decree and sale. The other members brought a suit to recover possession of their shares. Held that, inasmuch as upon the terms of the sale-certificate nothing more passed to the defendants at the sale than the right, title, and interest of the father, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit and to have a decree declaring them entitled to the whole property, subject to a declaration that the defendants as auction-purchasers of the father's share might come in and claim a partition of that share out of the joint estate. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on the further ground that the debt for which the decree against the father was passed was immoral within the meaning of Hindu law. *Sinhhuath Pande v. 206. ————— Mitakshara law—Sale of joint family property in execution of decree, as the result of a mortgage by managing member—Liability of shares of members of family not parties to the decree.—Although some of the members of a joint family had not been made parties to a suit upon a mortgage effected by the managing members, the entire family estate was bound by the act of the latter, and passed at the sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage. Whether the shares of all were bound depended on the authority of those who executed the mortgage. By this authority they had to raise money to pay a debt owed by the family as joint members of an ancestral trading firm. The managing members of a joint trading family, having purposed to mortgage the family estate, to pay a debt due by the firm, were sued upon it by the mortgagees, who afterwards purchased the property at the execution-sale. In a suit brought by the latter against the other members of the family to obtain a declaration that he had purchased the entire family estate, the defendants, without showing that the mortgage did not validly bind the family estate, contended that, not having been made parties to the suit, they were not affected by the decree, and their shares had not passed at the sale in execution. Held that, as the defence was substantially on the latter ground only, though there was every opportunity given to the defendants to raise the former ground also, the suit need not be remanded; and that the whole estate had passed to the purchaser. *Nanomi Babuasia v. 297. — Sale of joint family estate in execution of decrees upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family, under the Mitakshara, cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. A decree against indebted fathers, in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title, and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. Held, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. *BEAGUT PRESHAD SINGH v. sale held in execution of money-decrees against B and his brother, who were members of an undivided Hindu family. B's undivided son sued A—B and the remaining members of his family being also joined as defendants—to recover a share in the land, alleging that his interest was not bound by the sale; but he did not prove that the debt for which the decrees were passed was immoral, and it appeared that A had bargained and paid for the entire estate. The plaintiff was a minor at the time of the sale, and B was not the managing member of the family. Held that the Court-sale was binding on the plaintiff's share. Nanomi Babuasia v. DHIRAJRAM SADARAM . . . I. L. R., 19 Bom., 18

300. — Ancestral property—Alienations by father—Son's liability for father's debts—Purchaser—Notice.—Where a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law seeks to set aside his father's alienations of ancestral property, if the alienees are purchasers at Court-sales held in execution of decrees against the father, it is not enough for him to show that the debts, for which the decrees were passed, were contracted by the father for immoral purposes; it must also be shown that the auction-purchasers had notice that the debts were so contracted. The points to be determined in such case are—(1) What was the interest that was bargained for and paid for by the purchaser? Was it the father's interest only, or was it the interest of the entire family? (2) Were the debts for which the decrees were obtained, under which the property was sold, contracted for immoral purposes? and (3) Had the purchaser notice that the debts were so contracted? *Suraj Bansi Koor v. The plaintiff sued in 1883 for partition of ancestral property, consisting (inter alia) of certain thikans which had been sold in execution of decrees passed against his father. The plaintiff, though an adult at the time, was not a party to the suits in which the decrees were passed against the father, nor to the execution-proceedings. In the certificates of sale granted to the different purchasers, the property sold was described as being a four-annas share, which would be equal to the shares of the father and the son together, but this description was qualified by the statement that "the right, title, and interest in the above-mentioned property of the said B (i.e., the father) was sold." There was nothing to show that the purchasers bargained for and paid for the entire family estate. Moreover, the plaintiff's possession and enjoyment of the thikans in question was never disturbed, though the shares had each a separate possession of distinct portions of the ancestral property. Held that, under the circumstances, the father's interest alone passed to the auction-purchasers. KRISHNAJI LAKSHMAN v. 301. — Ancestral zamindari sold in execution of decree for money against the father, including the son's right of succession—Debt not immoral.—A sale in execution of a decree against a zamindar for his debt purported to compromise the whole estate in his zamindari. In a suit brought by his son against the purchaser, making the father also a party defendant, to obtain a declaration that the sale did not operate as against the son as heir, not affecting his interest in the estate, the evidence did not establish that the father's debt had been incurred by him for any immoral or illegal purpose. Held that, the impeachment of the debt failing, the suit failed, and that no partial interest, but the whole estate, had passed by the sale, the debt having been one which the son was bound to pay. Hardi Narain Saha v. Ruder Perakash Misser, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 626 (where the sale was only of whatever right, title, and interest the father had in property), distinguished. MINAKSHI NATUDU v. 302. — Money-decree—Decree against father alone—Purchaser at execution-sale under such decree—How far such sale binding on the interest of the sons not parties to the suit or execution-proceedings.—In the case of a joint Hindu family whose family property is sold by the father alone by private conveyance, or where it is sold in execution of a decree obtained against him alone, the mode of determining whether the entire property or only his interest in it passes by the sale, is to inquire what the parties contracted about in the case of a conveyance, or what the purchaser had reason to think he was buying if there was no conveyance, but only a sale in execution of a money-decree. In the case of an execution-sale the mere fact that the decree was a mere money-decree against the father as distinguished from one passed in a suit for the realization of a mortgage security directing the property to be sold is not a complete test. The plaintiff claimed certain property from the defendant, alleging that he had purchased it from a third person who had purchased it at an auction-sale held in execution of a money-decree obtained against the first defendant alone. The first defendant was the father of the remaining defendants, and they constituted a joint Hindu family. The sons contended that only the father's interest was bound by the sale, and the lower Courts decided in their favour. On appeal, the High Court reversed the decree, and sent back the case for a fresh decision on the ground that the lower Courts had decided the question in the case exclusively on the ground that the property had been purchased in execution of a money-decree without referring to the execution-proceedings. KAGAL GAMPAYA v. MANJAPPA. I. L. R., 12 Bom., 691

303. — Money-decree against deceased member—Execution after judgment-debtor's death against joint family property not allowed.—The mere obtaining of a simple money-decree against a member of a joint Hindu family without any steps being taken during his lifetime to obtain attachment under or execution of the decree does not entitle the decree-holder, after the judgment-debtor's death and a subsequent partition, to bring to sale in execution of the decree the interest which the judgment-debtor had in the joint family property. Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148; Bai Balkishen v. Bai Sita Ram, I. L. R., 7 All., 731; and Balbhadar v. Bisheshwar, I. L. R., 8 All., 495, referred to. JAGANNATH PRASAD v. SITA RAM

304. — Money-decree against father—Attachment of ancestral estate.—In execution of a money-decree, ancestral property of the joint family of the judgment-debtor was attached. His son sued to release their interest from attachment, alleging that the judgment-debt had been incurred for immoral purposes, which was denied by the decree-holder. It was held by the lower Courts that nothing more than the father's share was liable to be attached, as the sons were not parties to the decree. Held that the nature of the debt should be determined, since the creditor's power to attach and sell depends on the father's power to sell, which again depends on the nature of the debt. Nanomi Babuasin v. 305. — Son's liability for father's debt—Decree against father—Son's interests when not affected by sale.—When ancestral property is sold in execution of a decree against a Hindu father, there are only two cases in which the son's interests do not pass under the sale: first, when they are not sold; second, when the debt is not binding upon the sons by reason of its having been contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose. JOHARMAL v. has been contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose that the son, upon a decree against the father alone being executed by the attachment and sale of the family estate, can claim to have the liability limited to the father's own share under the Mitakshara law. In the absence of such proof, whether the entirety of the family estate has been transferred at the sale in execution or not, is a question of fact in each case dependent on what was understood to be brought, and has been brought to sale. Nanomi Babuasa v. Modhun Mohan, L. R., 18 I. A., 1: I. L. R., 18 Cal., 21, and Bhagabut Pershad Singh v. Orja Koor, L. R., 15 I. A., 99: I. L. R., 15 Cal., 717, referred to and followed. The description of the property in a certificate of sale as the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor is consistent with every interest which he might have caused to be sold passing at the sale, and does not necessarily import that, when the father of a joint family is the judgment-debtor, nothing is sold but his interest as a co-sharer. MAHABIR PERSHAD v. MONESWAR NATH SAHAI, I. L. R., 17 Cal., 584.

S. C. MAHABIR PERSHAD v. MARKUNDA NATH SAHAI, I. L. R., 17 I. A., 11.

807. ————— Decree against Hindu father—Interest of undivided son—Certificate of sale.—In execution of a decree for sale passed on a hypothecation-bond, all the land comprised in the security was attached. The judgment-debtor was a member of an undivided family; his son put in no claim in execution, but on a claim put in by his nephew it was ordered that the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor be sold. The decree-holder became the purchaser, and having obtained a sale certificate which recited that "all the interest of the judgment-debtor" was sold, he was put in possession of all the land part of which he leased to the son. Subsequently, the nephew obtained a decree for his share against the decree-holder and then purchased the rest of the land from him. In a suit by the son against the nephew to recover his share, the plaintiff having failed to prove that the judgment-debt had been incurred for purposes not binding on him,—Held that the entire estate less the interest of the nephew was sold to the decree-holder, and consequently the son's interest had passed to him. GNANAMMAL v. MUTHUSAMI I. L. R., 18 Mad., 47.

808. ————— Decree against manager of debt due by the family—Sale in execution of such decree. Effect of, on the other co-sharers, though not parties to the decree.—The plaintiffs and their brother E were in joint occupation of certain thikans in a khoti village. E, being the eldest brother, was in management of the family estate. In 1877 the khot sued E alone for arrears of assessment due on the thikans in question, obtained a decree, and in execution put up the thikans to sale. Defendants 2 to 5 became the auction-purchasers, and were put into possession by the Court. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a partition of their five-sixths share of the thikans sold, alleging that they were not bound by the Court-sale, as they were not parties to the khot's suit against their brother or to the execution-proceedings. Held that, the assessment for which the khot obtained a decree against E being due by the whole family, the sale in execution passed the shares of the plaintiffs, as well as that of their brother, to the auction-purchasers. Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand, I. L. R., 18 Cal., 70: I. L. R., 14 I. A., 187, followed, by which Lakshman Venkatesh v. Krishnath, I. L. R., 11 Bom., 700 and Maruti Narayan v. Lilachand, I. L. 809. ————— Mortgage for debt due by father of joint family—Sale in execution of decree—Effect of sale on members of family not made parties.—When in a mortgage suit the debt is due from the father, and after his death the property is brought to sale in execution of a decree against the widow or some of the heirs of the mortgagor, and the whole property is sold, then the heirs not brought on the record cannot be permitted to raise the objection that they are not bound by the sale, simply because they are not parties on the record. This principle of law applies as much to a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law as to a Mahomedan family. Hari v. Jairam, I. L. R., 14 Bom., 597, and Khursatibi v. Keso, I. L. Subsequently C got a decree upon his mortgage and purchased the property at an auction-sale held in execution of the decree. In a suit brought by C's son against the heirs of A to recover possession of the property, — Held that, having regard to the language of the mortgage-deed, there could be no doubt that the entire family property was intended to be mortgaged. The auction-purchaser, therefore, took the whole interest in the property, and not merely the interest of A alone. Simbbhunath Pande v. Golap Sing, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 572: L. R., 14 I. 312. ————— Ancestral property—Father's debt—Decree against father—Liability of family property—Purchaser, Rights of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 318, 332, 333.—In a suit for specific performance of a certain contract for the sale of land which the defendant had failed to complete, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant for the repayment of the earnest-money and his costs of suit. In execution of this decree, the plaintiff attached the whole of the property, which the defendant had agreed to sell. A warrant for sale was duly issued and claims were advertised for. The sons of the defendant thereupon appeared before the Commissioner and claimed to be entitled to three-fourths of the property, which they alleged was ancestral. Their claim was not investigated, but to save time it was agreed that a note should be made in the proclamation of sale, that the sons claimed to be interested in the mid lands and premises on the ground that they were ancestral, and that the one-fourth share of the defendant only could be sold by the attaching creditor. Under this proclamation, the right, title, and interest of the defendant in the property were sold. At the sale the sons gave notice of their claim, the property was duly sold, and the purchaser was put into possession, the claimants being dispossessed. The claimants then took out a summons under s. 332 of the Civil Procedure Code calling upon the purchaser to show cause why they should not be restored to possession. Held (1) that the judgment-debt due by the defendant was one which the plaintiff could enforce, if necessary, against ancestral property in the hands of the defendant to the extent of the whole interest therein of the defendant and his sons, as it was not an immoral or illegal debt; (2) that, assuming that the property in question was ancestral, what the purchaser bought was the whole property, and not merely the right which the defendant might have as the father of the family to a share of it on partition. The plaintiff evidently did not acknowledge any right in the claimants, but intended to sell the very largest right the defendant might have in the property, which, as the judgment-debt was one for which the family property was liable, was the whole estate of the joint family; (3) that the purchaser, who had bought the whole of the rights of the family in the property, was entitled to the possession of what he bought, and was not required to file a suit for partition, because the shares of all the co-parceners had passed to him; (4) assuming that the property was ancestral, the claimants were not in possession on their own account, and were therefore not entitled to be restored under s. 332 of the Civil Procedure Code. A member of a joint Hindu family cannot say that he is in possession of any particular portion of the joint property on his own account. His possession is the possession of the family; (5) what all the sons were entitled to was to try the fact or nature of the debt due to the plaintiff in a suit of their own. In such suit they would have to prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale. COOVERJI HIRJI v. DEWSEY BHOSA . I. L. R., 17 Bom., 718

313. ————— Execution of mortgage-decree against the estate of a deceased judgment-debtor, member of a joint family under Mitakshara law—Survivorship—Hindu law.—On an application for the execution of a mortgage-decree the following order was made: "In this case the sale was stayed awaiting the disposal of the regular suit. It being not necessary to keep the case pending, it is ordered that, attachment being allowed to stand, the case be struck off for the present." The judgment-debtor, the father of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law, having died, a fresh application for execution was subsequently made against his estate. The heirs of the judgment-debtor objected to the application on the ground that, the decree having been passed against their father alone, it could not be executed against the joint family estate, now theirs by operation of Mitakshara law. Held that, inasmuch as there was an attachment subsisting at the time of the application, the estate of the judgment-debtor under attachment at the time of his death was liable after his death, even though it had passed to the surviving members of the joint Mitakshara family. *Suraj Bansi Koor v. 314. ————— Mitakshara law—Debts incurred by agent of joint family—Suit and decree against managing members of a joint family business—Effect of sale against other members, though not parties to decree—Execution-proceedings, Setting aside of.—The plaintiffs, who were the members of a joint Hindu family, sought to recover a share in certain properties on the allegation that they were joint family properties, but wrongfully sold in execution of a decree upon a bond executed by their paternal uncles, L and S, and one B S. The family was a trading family, and carried on a money-lending business under the supervision of L and S. One Z M had dealings with L and S, and in the course of such dealings he deposited a certain sum of money with them, for which the above bond was executed, in which certain properties belonging to the family were pledged as security. Subsequently, Z M sued on this bond, obtained a decree, and put up the properties for sale, which were purchased by some of the defendants, who dispossessed the plaintiffs. The share of the properties advertised for sale, certified in the sale-certificates granted to the defendants to have passed to them, was the share of the whole family in the properties sold, but it was described as the right, title, and interest of L and S, the persons sued. Held that L and S, though not the managers of the family, were yet its accredited agents in the management of the money-lending business, and as such had the authority of the other members to pledge the family properties for a joint-debt contracted in the ordinary course of that business. Joharra Bilee v. Sreegopal Misser, *I. L. and (2) whether, as a matter of fact, the purchaser bargained and paid for the entirety. A and his three younger brothers, B, C, and D, were members of a joint Hindu family. A was the manager of the family. After A's death, B, C, and D were sued as his legal representatives in respect of a debt which A had contracted for the benefit of the family. A decree was passed against them as A's representatives, directing the recovery of the debt by sale of A's estate. In execution of this decree, A's right, title, and interest in certain family property was put up to sale. Held that the sale affected the rights of all the members of the joint family. Under the circumstances, what was meant to be brought to sale was the right, title, and interest of the family of which A had been the manager, and for the benefit of which the debt had been incurred. JANKIBAI v. In a suit by the sons of M and S and several other members of the family for recovery of their interests in the property, Held that there was no "debt antecedent" to the decree in this case; that even if the right to obtain damages for the theft or misappropriation could be said to have created a "debt," the debt was tainted with illegality or immorality, the sons were not under a pious duty to pay the debt, and the interests of the sons did not pass by the sale. Held also that the purchasers in this case were not entitled to the equities of a bond fide purchaser, as the decree, if examined, would have put them upon inquiry. PARMAN DASS v. by mistake against father, Effect of, on sons—Sale in execution of decree against father—Purchase by decree-holder—Interest passed by sale—Nature and extent of mother's share in joint family property, Nature and devolution of.—A Hindu, governed by the Benares school of law, died, leaving a joint family consisting of four sons, A, B, C, and D, and a widow, E, to whom he assigned an ancestral mouzah in lieu of her maintenance. All the sons predeceased the widow, C and D dying childless. After the widow's death, a separation took place in 1862 among all her grandsons, viz., E and F, sons of A, and G and H, sons of B. At the separation, E withheld possession, among other properties, of the mouzah assigned to B on alleged transfer, from B and the widows of C and D. H sued E, making G a pro forma defendant, and recovered a decree for 4 annas of the mouzah in 1864, and G also recovered a similar decree for 4 annas in 1866. Some time after H brought an action for mesne profits and recovered a decree in 1875 against M, heir of E, and also against G, although there was no allegation of wrong against the latter and no finding in the Court's judgment to that effect. In execution of this decree, H caused the interest of G in the mouzah to be sold, purchased it himself, and took delivery of possession on the 19th December 1878. In 1881, the wife of G, together with her two sons (plaintiffs 1 and 2), executed a kotala in respect of one anna six pies of the mouzah to S (defendant 4); the wife of G died in 1885. The present suit was brought by the three sons of G to recover a four-fifths of the four annas of the said mouzah—a three-fifths in their own right and a one-fifth in right of their mother. Among the objections raised by the defendants and pressed by them on appeal to the High Court it was urged (1) that out of the four-anna share, two annas were acquired by G collaterally from his uncles C and D, and therefore were not "ancestral property" of the plaintiffs. Held that the mouzah in question retained the character of ancestral property during the lifetime of the widow E, and that, upon her death, it devolved upon her grandsons E, F, G, and H as ancestral property, and not as property derived by collateral succession from either C or D. (2) It was also urged that the decree of 1875 was conclusive as to the liability of G, and the plaintiff could not raise any question on the existence of a debt binding on them. Held that the plaintiffs were not precluded from showing that there was no real debt, and that the sale held in execution did not pass the entire interest of the family of the plaintiffs. *Suraj Bansi Koer v. Simbhunath Panday v. Golab Sing, I. L. R., 14 Cal., 572; L. R., 14 I. A., 77, referred to. (3) It was further urged that, the claim being for a four-fifths share, the present suit should be treated as one for partition, and shares distributed according to the state of the family on the date of the suit, and in that case plaintiff's claim to the share of their mother would not stand. Held that this contention could not be sustained, and the defendants could claim only that share which, if a partition had taken place on or before the date of sale, would be allotted to the father, i.e., a one-fifth share. Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198; L. R., 4 I. A., 247; Hurday Narain Sahu v. Rooderperkash Misser, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 626; L. R., 11 I. A., 26; and *Suraj Bansi Koer v. (4) As to the kotala executed by the plaintiffs 1 and 2 and their mother in 1881, it was contended that six pies out of a one anna six pies share, the proportionate share of the mother, passed absolutely to the purchaser, and plaintiffs could not recover that portion of the share. Held that the mother was entitled to a one-fifth share in lieu of maintenance only, and had no absolute power of disposal in respect of that share. Judomath Tewaree v. Bishomath Tewaree, 9 W. 1. NATURE OF RIGHT.

1. ———— Nature of right to maintenance—Right not based on contract.—Ordinarily, the right to maintenance does not rest upon contract. It is a liability created by the Hindu law, and arises out of the jural relation of the Hindu family. It is enforceable in numerous instances in which there is no connection with contract. SIDLINGAPA v. SIDAVA [I. L. R., 2 Bom., 624]

8. ———— Maintenance, Widow's right to—Arrears of maintenance.—A widow has by Hindu law a right to maintenance, and the amount is to be determined on a consideration not merely of her absolute necessities, but also of the circumstances of her family. SARVABHAI v. BRAVANJI RAJE GHATJI ZANJARBA DESHMUKH [1 Bom., 194]

9. ———— Widow's maintenance—Separate savings.—In a suit by a widow against her step-son for separate maintenance on the ground of ill-treatment, the Court held that, the ill-treatment being proved, a reasonable maintenance ought to be provided. Taking the income tax return as evidence of the amount of defendant's income, Rs 26 a month out of an annual income of Rs 7,000 was held to be sufficient. In an enquiry of this kind any savings which a woman might make by living with her own family should not be taken into consideration; and the degradation which a Hindu widow is expected to live in is a matter of ceremonial observance rather than of law. HUBAY MOHUN ROY v. NYANTARA . . . [25 W. R., 474]

13. ————— Widow—Style of living in husband's lifetime.—It is not necessary that a Hindu widow should be maintained in the same estate in which her husband would maintain her. KALLERPERSAUD SINGH v. KUPPOO KOOWAREE [4 W. R., 65]

14. ————— Annual proceeds of husband's share of family property.—A Hindu widow is not entitled to a larger portion of the annual produce of the family property as maintenance than the annual proceeds of the share to which her husband would have been entitled on partition if he were living. MADHAVRAO KESHAV TILAK v. GUNGARAJ . . . I. L. R., 2 Bom., 689

15. ————— Penalty for vexatious defence—Reduction of maintenance.—Case in which some of the elements in determining what is a suitable amount of maintenance for a Hindu widow out of her deceased husband's estate were considered. A Court is not justified in reducing, as a kind of punishment for vexatious defence to a suit, the amount of maintenance which it would otherwise have awarded. NITTO KISSOREE DOSSEE v. JOGENDRO NATH MULLICK . . . I. L. R., 5 I. A., 55

16. ————— Increase or decrease for sufficient cause.—There is nothing in the law to prevent an increase or a decrease of the amount of maintenance allowed to a Hindu widow, should sufficient cause be shown for either. The increase, if allowed, should be made from date of suit. SREERAM BHUTTACHARJEE v. PUDDUMOOKHSE DEBIA . . . 9 W. R., 152

17. ————— Widow's second suit for maintenance—Enhancement of rate of maintenance—Res judicata.—A Hindu widow in 1867 obtained a decree for maintenance against her husband's co-parceners, but the decree created no charge on the land. The family estate having passed to a collateral relative, the widow now sued him for maintenance at an increased rate with arrears, and asked for a charge on the estate, alleging that prices had risen and that in other respects also circumstances had changed. Held that the decree in the suit of 1867 was not a bar to the present suit. BANGARU ANMAL v. VIJAYAMACHI REDDIAR I. L. R., 22 Mad., 175

18. ————— Widow—Reduction of amount, Ground for.—Held in a suit by a Hindu widow for maintenance that the circumstance that she was not a childless widow, but had had a son who had died a minor subsequently to his father, was not a ground for reducing the allowance she would have been reasonably entitled to had she been a childless widow. NARHAR SINGH v. DIRGNATH KUAR [I. L. R., 2 All., 407] and status of the deceased, and to the position and status of the widow, and the expenses involved by the religious and other duties which she has to discharge. Nitto Kissoree Dossee v. Jogendro Nath Mullick, I. L. R., 5 I. A., 55, and Narhar Singh v. Dirgnath Kuar, I. L. R., 2 All., 407, referred to. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The amount of maintenance should not be determined with reference to the principle that the life of a Hindu widow should be of a peculiarly ascetic character, and that she should have only a "starving allowance." The austerities enjoined upon Hindu widows are matters not of legal obligation, but only of moral injunction, and cannot be enforced by Courts of justice. The Courts should bear in mind that Hindu widows are by ancient custom debarred from re-marriage, and should fix the maintenance at a sum sufficient to obviate the danger of the widow being driven to immorality. BAISENI v. RUP SINGH [I. L. R., 12 All., 559]

20. ————— Maintenance of widow by her husband's brothers and nephew—Death of the plaintiff's husband prior to his father's death.—In a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the property of S, the father, consisted at any rate partly of ancestral property. He died leaving three sons and one grandson (son of a predeceased son). A, another son of S, died childless before his father leaving his widow, the plaintiff. In a suit by her against the brothers and the nephew of her husband for maintenance, in which she claimed Rs100 a month,—Held that in determining the amount of maintenance the Court should take into consideration not only the reasonable wants of a person in her position of life, but also the means of the family of her husband. Nittokissoree Dossee v. Jogendro Nath Mullick, I. L. R., 5 I. A., 55; Baiseni v. Rup Singh, I. L. R., 12 All., 559, referred to. DEVI PERSAD v. GUNWANTI KONE [I. L. R., 22 Cal., 410]

21. ————— Suit for reduction of maintenance where fund from which it is paid has decreased—Right of suit.—A Hindu lady obtained a decree awarding her maintenance at a certain fixed rate and charging the assets of a certain firm with the payment of such maintenance. There was no provision in this decree that such rate was subject to any modification which future circumstances might render necessary. The assets of such firm having diminished, the proprietor of the same brought a suit for the reduction of such rate of maintenance. Held that such suit was maintainable. BUKA BAI v. GANDA BAI [I. L. R., 1 All., 594]

22. ————— Decrease of estate in value on which maintenance is charged.—A suit brought by a widow against the adopted son of her husband, for possession of her husband's estate, was compromised on the terms of a solenamah under which the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum for maintenance, the same to be secured by assignment of the rents payable by certain raiyats. Subsequently the holding the rents of which were assigned having become unfit for cultivation by reason of an inundation of salt water, and the defendant himself having become greatly impoverished by his estate having been injured by the same cause, the amount due for maintenance was not paid, and the widow brought a suit to recover that amount. Held that, inasmuch as the amount of maintenance must be taken to have been fixed with reference to the extent and value of the property, the Court had power to reconsider the allowance and to re-adjust it to the altered circumstances. RAJENDRO NATH ROY v. PUTTO SOONDERY DASSEE. 5 C. L. R., 18

23. — Reduction in value of property on which maintenance is charged—Natural equity.—A zamindar bequeathed the whole of his zamindari to his eldest son, leaving certain fixed stipends to his other children. In consequence of subsequent events, the Court considered these stipends ought to be reduced. It was alleged that the value of the zamindari had been reduced by sale of a part of it; but as it was nowhere alleged that the sale had been occasioned by bad seasons or acts of God, and not by the neglect of the person through whom the appellant claimed, the question of natural equity was held not to have arisen. GERES CHUNDER ROY v. SUMBRON CHUNDER ROY. [5 W. R., P. C., 98]

24. — Suit to reduce rate awarded by decree.—S, a Hindu, obtained a decree for maintenance at a certain rate against R, her father-in-law. After the death of R, V, who was adopted by R subsequent to the decree, sued S to have the rate reduced on the ground that the estate of R, which came to his hands, was considerably diminished in value. Held that, as the estate had been diminished by the voluntary acts of R and V, the claim could not be allowed. VILAYA v. SRIPATHI. [I. L. R., 8 Mad., 94]

25. — Widow's maintenance—Withholding of maintenance—Demand and refusal—Arrears of maintenance—Limitation—Decree providing for reduction of maintenance in event of altered circumstances of persons paying it—Decree, Form of.—K, a Hindu widow, sued the undivided brothers of her deceased husband for maintenance. She also claimed arrears of maintenance for six years prior to the institution of the suit. The Court of first instance passed a decree in her favour awarding her maintenance at the rate of Rs2 a year during her lifetime, but "subject to variation according to the change in defendants' circumstances for the worse." The Court also awarded her arrears of maintenance for three years only (not six as claimed) on the ground that she was only twenty years old, and had always lived with her father and been maintained by him, and that a formal demand had only been made on the defendants three years previously. On appeal, the District Court increased the rate of maintenance to Rs5 per annum, and awarded the plaintiff arrears of six years, holding that the fact of the demand having been made only three years before suit did not prevent her from recovering arrears for six years. Held by the High Court that, although the withholding of maintenance, which constituted the cause of action, might be proved otherwise than by a demand and refusal, yet in this case it had not been shown that there were any circumstances which would amount to a refusal of maintenance. The decree of the lower Appeal Court was therefore confirmed, except so far as it gave the plaintiff arrears of maintenance for six years, which period was altered to three years. The clause as to the reduction of maintenance in the event of altered circumstances was also struck out. MOTILAL PRANNATH v. BAI KASHI. [I. L. R., 17 Bom., 45]

26. — Decree for maintenance—Suit for altering the rate of maintenance fixed by a decree.—A suit will lie to obtain a reduction in the amount of maintenance decreed to a Hindu widow on a change of circumstances, such as a permanent deterioration in the value of the family property. But where such deterioration is due to the plaintiff's own default in not keeping the property in a proper state of repair, he has no right to ask for a reduction. Per PARSONS, J.—Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved. GOPIKARAI v. DATTATEAYA. [I. L. R., 24 Bom., 386]

32. Suit to recover arrears of maintenance due under a personal decree and to establish a charge for future maintenance on the family property.—A Hindu widow obtained a personal decree against her father-in-law for maintenance. Her late husband's five brothers were made parties to the suit, but no personal decree was made against them, nor did the widow ask that her maintenance be made a charge on the family property. On the death of her father-in-law, the family property devolved on his sons and grandsons, who sold certain of the property. There were arrears of maintenance due and the widow instituted the present suit, in which she asked for a decree establishing her right to receive maintenance for her life and for the arrears of maintenance on the responsibility of the property. Held (1) that the maintenance not having been declared a charge upon the portion of the property which had been alienated, this property was free from any charge for her maintenance; (2) that the arrears of maintenance constituted a personal debt of the plaintiff's deceased father-in-law, and that his sons and grandson (the defendants) incurred his liability on his decease, and were bound to discharge the same out of the family property; (3) that the right to maintenance being enforceable against the defendants, the right to have it made a charge on the family property was enforceable along with it. *BHAGIRATHI v. I. L. R., 17 Mad., 268

33. Previous demand—Right to arrears of maintenance.—A Hindu widow brought a suit against her husband's brother to establish her right to maintenance, and to recover arrears for six years; she had made no demand before suit. Held that she was not entitled to a decree for the arrears. *SESHAMMA v. I. L. R., 21 All., 183

35. Past non-payment of arrears—Right of suit—Proof of wrongful withholding—Unwillingness of holder of estate to pay, and denial of right.—With regard to arrears of maintenance, past non-payment does not necessarily give a right of action: it is a prima facie proof of wrongful withholding. Where the evidence shows that the holder of the estate was unwilling to pay and denied the right, that prima facie proof is not rebutted. *YARLAGADDA MALLIKARJUNA PRASADA NAIDU v. 6. RIGHT TO MAINTENANCE.

(a) GENERAL CASES.

37. Agreement by samindar to maintain collateral relations—Construction of agreement—Charge on estate—Impartible samindari.—The holder of an impartible samindari estate, in an agreement with the eldest son of his younger brother, settling family disputes, used words to this effect: "I have agreed to give you, through the Collector, every month Rs300 on account of the maintenance of yourself, your younger brothers, three in all, and the rest of your family." The son of the youngest brother now sued the son and successor of that zamindar for maintenance according to the agreement. Held that the payment was not limited to the life of one, or all, of the brothers, but that the issue of each of the three were included, and that maintenance at a proportionate rate had been rightly decreed to the plaintiff as a charge on the estate. *LAKSHMI NARAYANA ANANDA GARU v. son of the defendant, who was the Thakor of Amod, a talukhdari estate of the nature of an impartible raj or principality. The plaintiff's family belonged to the community of Molesalam Girasias. Plaintiff alleged that, according to a family usage, he as a junior member of the family was entitled to receive maintenance from his father, who was the holder of the gadi. The estate was under the management of the talukhdari settlement officer from 1878 to 1888, during which period that officer granted the plaintiff an allowance in lieu of maintenance without any objection on the defendant's part. On the 1st August 1888, the estate was restored to the defendant, who stopped the allowance. The plaintiff thereupon sued in 1891 to recover from the defendant arrears of maintenance for two years and eleven months at Rs200 a month. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that the claim was not time-barred. FATESANGJI JAEVATSANGJI v. 44. — Right of maintenance of a sonless widowed daughter in indigent circumstances out of properties inherited by the father's heirs.—A sonless widowed daughter in indigent circumstances is not entitled to separate maintenance out of the estate of her father in the hands of his heirs. The right would depend upon the fact whether the widowed sonless daughter was at the time of her father's death maintained by him as a dependent member of his family with others whom he was legally or morally bound to maintain. 60. Right to maintenance of illegitimate member of joint family—Suit by legitimate son of illegitimate member of family to redeem mortgage made by legitimate member—Right of redemption.—An allowance for maintenance was received by the plaintiff's father, that father having been an illegitimate son born to a collateral relation of the head of a family. The ancestral property was in the possession of the latter, who was in a senior line of descent. The plaintiff, who was himself the legitimate son of his father, claimed to be entitled to redeem a mortgage of part of the ancestral estate, that mortgage having been effected by the above-mentioned head of the family. His ground of claim was that he had inherited the right to maintenance and had thus an interest of charge within the meaning of s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1884, to entitle him to redeem. Held by the High Court,—the right of an illegitimate son in a Hindu family to receive maintenance from the family property is a purely personal right, and does not descend to his son. The legitimate son of an illegitimate member of a Hindu family who as such illegitimate son might have had a right to maintenance from the property of his father, had no such interest in the estate belonging to the family as would entitle him to redeem a mortgage made by a previous rightful and legitimate owner of the estate. Held by the Privy Council in appeal,—in the regenerate classes of Hindus a son of illegitimate birth has no part in the family inheritance, but is entitled to maintenance out of his father's estate—a right personal to him and not inherited by his offspring. Choturya Ram Murdun Sun v. Subud Purshad Sun, 7 Moore's I. A., 18, referred to and followed. Held also that the High Court had rightly concluded that the plaintiff had not inherited that right. The authority of the Mitakshara in Ch. I, ss. 11 and 12, was more consistent with a personal right of the illegitimate son. ROSHAN SINGH v. BALWANT SINGH of it which is allotted to her son on the partition. A separation in food and worship took place between a Hindu widow, her son, and her two step-sons, after which the widow lived as a member of her son's family and was maintained by him. A partition of the moveable property having been made, a suit was brought by the son against the step-sons for partition of the immoveable property, and a decree was made defining the shares of the parties therein. That suit was brought and decreed pending a suit by the widow against her son and step-sons for maintenance from the date of the separation, and for fixing her future maintenance, in which suit she sought to have the maintenance charged on the whole estate left by her husband. Held that, from the separation to the decree in the partition suit, the widow was entitled to maintenance charged on the whole estate, and subsequently to the decree to a charge on her son's share only. But, inasmuch as she had during the former period been maintained by her son, and could not claim maintenance over again from her step-sons, whatever claim her son might have against them for contribution for her maintenance during that time, the suit as against them must be dismissed. Where the annual value of the whole estate was found to be Rs. 70,000 and the proportionate annual value of her son's portion was Rs. 23,333, Rs. 150 a month was held under the circumstances to be a suitable maintenance. *KEDAR NATH COENDOO CHOWDHRY v. Widow's right to a share in lieu of maintenance on a partition.—A Hindu mother is entitled under the law to be maintained out of the joint family property, and if anything is done affecting that right, as for instance by the sale of any particular share by any of her sons, her right comes into existence. *AMITA LAL MITTER v. of one N. N had three sons, viz., M, P, and the defendant C, and all lived together as a joint family. The plaintiff was married to P about thirty years previously to this suit, she being then eleven years of age. P died when he was fourteen years old, before the plaintiff had attained puberty, and while she was still living with her parents. After her husband's death she went to the house of her father-in-law N, and was residing there at the time of his death. He died intestate in 1881, leaving moveable and immoveable property of the value of Rs. 1,50,000, all of which was admittedly self-acquired property. His widow (L) and two sons, viz., M and the defendant C, survived him. M died in 1883. After N's death, the plaintiff continued for a time to reside in the family house with C. Disputes, however, arose, and she left the house, and went to reside with her brother. She now sued her brother-in-law, C, for maintenance, alleging that she had been obliged to leave his house in consequence of ill-treatment. She claimed Rs. 1,000 per month by way of maintenance, and also prayed for the delivery of certain ornaments belonging to her, which she said were in the defendant's possession. The defendant denied possession of the plaintiff's ornaments; and, as to her claim for maintenance, he contended that all the property of his father, N, was self-acquired, and that as such the plaintiff's husband, P, had never any interest in it, having predeceased N, and that she was therefore not entitled to maintenance out of it. He stated, however, that he was willing to maintain her if she would return to his house and live with his family. Held that the plaintiff, being as P's widow a member of her husband's undivided family, was entitled to maintenance from the defendant. Upon N's death, intestate, his property devolved upon his sons (M and C) as ancestral property for the benefit of the undivided family, of which he (N) was in his lifetime the head; or, in other words, subject to the incidents to which ancestral property is liable. If one of such sons had been disqualified from inheriting by reason of idiotry, etc., he, though a member of the undivided family, would only be entitled to maintenance. The plaintiff, by reason of her sex, was disqualified from inheriting in competition with males, but none the less was she entitled to maintenance out of the ancestral estate which had devolved upon the males, with whom she constituted an undivided family. Where a widowed sister-in-law claims maintenance from a brother-in-law, the only question for the Court to consider is, whether the brother-in-law has ancestral property in his hands. Held also that, the plaintiff being legally entitled to claim maintenance from the defendant, she was entitled to separate maintenance, and that the defendant could not insist upon her living in his house. The property left by N at his death was of the value of Rs. 1,50,000. Held that an allowance of Rs. 40 per month should be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant as maintenance. If P (the plaintiff's husband) had survived his father, N, the share of N's property (deducting one-fourth for L, the widow of N), which would have devolved on him, would have been a little less than Rs. 40,000, or

Rs. 1,600 per annum at 4 per cent.—that is, Rs. 133 per month. The plaintiff could not be allowed more than the interest on that sum. He had two sons, one of whom predeceased him, leaving a widow. He died intestate, leaving a son and a widow. The widow of the son who had predeceased his father was, at the time of her husband's death, a minor; she had never cohabited with him or resided with his family or received from them any maintenance, but had always resided with, and been maintained by, her own father. After her father-in-law's death, she sued her brother-in-law and her father-in-law's widow for maintenance, which she claimed to have charged upon the immoveable property which had belonged to the father-in-law during his lifetime, and which was now in the hands of the defendants. Held (MAHMOOD, J., expressing no opinion on this point) that the property in suit, though inherited by the defendants, could not, so far as the plaintiff's rights were concerned, be correctly described as "ancestral property" in the defendants' hands from which she would be entitled to maintenance; inasmuch as during the father's lifetime, it was not in any sense ancestral, and the sons had no co-parcenary interest in it, but merely the contingent interest of taking it on their father's death intestate, and in the case of the plaintiff's husband, such interest, by reason of his predeceasing his father, never became vested. Addibai v. Cursandas Nathu, I. L. R., 11 Bom., 199, dissented from on this point. Sartribai v. Luxmibai, I. L. R., 2 Bom., 573, referred to. Held, however, that the father was under a moral, though not a legal, obligation not only to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law during his lifetime, but also to make provision out of his self-acquired property for her maintenance after his death; and that such moral obligation in the father became, by reason of his self-acquired property having come by inheritance into the hands of his surviving son, a legal obligation enforceable by suit against that son (who took the estate not for his own benefit, but for the spiritual benefit of the last proprietor) and against the property in question. *Addibai v. 83. ——— Son's widow—Self-acquired property.—Property inherited from maternal grandfather.—A Hindu died, leaving property with his widow, of which a portion was self-acquired and the remainder had been inherited by him from his maternal grandfather. He had also by will devised certain items to his wife. His son, who had predeceased him, had also left a widow, who now claimed maintenance from her mother-in-law. Held that, inasmuch as property inherited from a maternal grandfather is not self-acquired, the rule of non-liability for maintenance relating to self-acquired property ought not to be extended to property of this description, which was therefore liable to the maintenance claimed. Semble—That the moral obligation to support a son's widow, to which her father-in-law is subject, acquires on his death the force of a legal obligation as against his self-acquired assets in the hands of his heir; and that a testamentary disposition of such self-acquired assets, made in favour of volunteers by a person morally bound to provide maintenance, cannot affect the position of a party whose moral claim has become a legal right. *Ammakannu v. Her right depends upon the existence in their hands of ancestral property. The doctrine, that in certain relationships and independently of the possession of ancestral estate, maintenance is a legal and imperative duty, while in other relationships it is only a moral and optional duty, discussed. Semble.—A Hindu widow, who has received a full share as and for her maintenance, cannot, when she has exhausted it, enforce from the relatives of her husband, or from the family estate, a further allotment, or a money allowance for maintenance. S, a Hindu widow, voluntarily living apart from her husband's family, sued his paternal uncle, the nearest surviving male relative of her husband, for a money allowance as maintenance. for either of the two following reasons, viz., (1) that the defendant was separated in estate from the plaintiff's husband at the time of his death; (2) that at the institution of the suit the defendant had not in his hands any ancestral estate, or any estate which had belonged to the plaintiff's husband. [I L. R., 2 Bom., 632]

96. ———— Obligation of brothers to maintain widow of a brother who predeceased their father whose property they have inherited.—The principle that an heir succeeding to property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and is therefore under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support, has ample basis in the Hindu law of the Bengal school. It is immaterial whether the property so inherited is moveable or immoveable. In each case it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means, and various other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was, according to the principles of the Hindu law and to the usages and practice of the Hindu people, morally bound to maintain that party. The above principle is applicable to the case of a widow claiming maintenance from her husband's brothers who had inherited her father-in-law's property, her own husband having predeceased his father. Janki v. Nandram, I. L. R., 11 All., 194, followed. Provided, therefore, that there is nothing to show that she was not a dependent member of her father-in-law's family, within the meaning of the rule of Hindu law enjoining a moral obligation on a person to maintain such members of his family, such a widow was entitled to maintenance. *KAMINI DASSEE v. husband prior to his father's death.—In a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the property of S, the father, consisted, at any rate partly, of ancestral property. In a suit by her against the brothers and the nephew of her husband for maintenance, in which she claimed ₹100 a month.—Held that, as the plaintiff's husband had a vested interest in the ancestral property, and could have, even during his father's lifetime, enforced partition of that property, and as the Hindu law provides that the surviving co-parceners should maintain the widow of a deceased co-parcener, the plaintiff was entitled to maintenance. *Khetramani Dasi v. 106. Widow leaving husband's house and family.—Although the Shastras impose on a Hindu widow the duty of living with her deceased husband's relatives, the duty has been regarded by the British Courts as a moral duty which they will not lend their aid to enforce, and of which the non-performance does not deprive the widow of her right to inherit. By consent of the parties, and for the protection of the estate, which consisted of cash, the Court ordered the amount to be invested in Government promissory notes in the joint names of the widow and brothers of the deceased, and directed that the interest should be paid to the sole receipt of the widow, with liberty for her to apply to the Court to order a sale if any necessity arose which would justify a sale under the Hindu law. *UMRIT KOWSER v. 108. ———— Right to select residence.—By the Hindu common law the right of a widow to maintenance is one accruing from time to time according to her want and exigencies. A statute of limitation might do much harm if it should force widows to claim their strict rights and commence litigation which, but for the purpose of keeping alive their claim, would not be necessary or desirable. In a suit brought by the widow against the eldest son for maintenance, it was pleaded that under the will of the husband it was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to maintenance that she should live under the same roof and in joint family with the defendant. It was further pleaded that there having been no demand and refusal of maintenance the plaintiff had no cause of action. Held that there was no condition in the will making the plaintiff's right to maintenance dependent upon her living under the same roof with the defendant, and that she was therefore left in the ordinary position of a Hindu widow, in whose case separation from the ancestral home would not generally disentitle her to maintenance suitable to her rank and position. NARAYAN-SAO RAMCHANDRA PANT v. 109. ———— Right to select residence—Separate maintenance.—A Hindu widow is not bound to reside with the family of her husband, and, if he were in union with them at the time of his death, she is entitled to a separate maintenance where the family property is sufficiently large to admit of an allotment of separate maintenance to her. Where, however, the plaintiff, a Hindu widow, was satisfied for several years with the maintenance, viz., Rs 16 per annum, fixed in an agreement executed by her and the defendant, and where the family of the husband was large and the family property small, the defendant being willing to maintain her in his house like the other members, the High Court declined to increase the amount, but gave the widow the right to elect between taking that sum and living separately, or accepting the defendant's offer to receive and maintain her in his own house in the same manner as the other members of his family. RAMCHANDRA VISHNU BAPAT v. Where there is family property available for maintenance, it lies upon the parties resisting the claim to separate maintenance to show that the circumstances are such as to disentitle the widow thereto, e.g., that she resides separately from her husband's family for immoral purposes, or that the family property is so small as not reasonably to admit of an allotment to

112. ———— Suit against father-in-law—Defence that plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will—Effect of direction in husband's will that widow should reside in family house.—The plaintiff, after the death of her husband A, sued her father-in-law for maintenance. A, although not adopted, had always been treated by his maternal grandfather N as his son. They lived together, and after N's death, in 1878, A and his wife (the plaintiff) continued to live occasionally with N's widow M. A died in 1876 without issue, leaving the plaintiff, his widow, who was then a minor of the age of fourteen. A left a will and appointed M his executrix. In his will he spoke of himself as the adopted son of N (which he was not), and he purported by it to dispose of N's property. He bequeathed ornaments of the value of Rs 2,000 to his wife, and he directed that, if she resided in the house of his father (the defendant) or in the house of M, she should be paid Rs 10 a month as maintenance by M; but if she went to live elsewhere, that only Rs 7 a month should be paid to her. M proved the will. In 1879 the plaintiff left M's house and went to live with her mother; and in 1889 she filed this suit against her father-in-law, the defendant, for maintenance. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will, and further that the plaintiff had failed to obey her husband's direction to reside either in M's house or the defendant's house, and that therefore she was not entitled to a separate maintenance. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to enforce her claim under her husband's will in lieu of claiming maintenance from her father-in-law. In answer to plaintiff's claim, the defendant was bound to show that she was possessed of property out of which she could maintain herself, and he did not discharge that onus by showing that by suing M she might possibly recover the maintenance provided for her by the will. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to separate maintenance from the defendant. The general rule of law is that a Hindu widow is not bound to reside in her deceased husband's family house and does not forfeit her right to maintenance out of her husband's estate by going to reside elsewhere, unless she goes elsewhere for an improper purpose. Quare—Whether that rule applies if she goes to reside elsewhere notwithstanding a direction in

114. ———— Widow directed by the husband to be maintained in the family house—Just cause for not living in family house—Imputation of unchastity.—A Hindu widow, who is directed by her husband to be maintained in the family house, is not entitled to maintenance if she resides elsewhere without a just cause. P., a Brahmin, resided at Kara and died there in 1874, while his wife (the plaintiff) was living with her parents at Dahhol. By his will he devised the greater part of his property to his nephew M., and bequeathed a house and certain other property to his wife "if she came to live at Kara." In 1888 the plaintiff sued M. and his brother for arrears of maintenance, alleging that they were in possession of her deceased husband's property, and therefore were liable for her maintenance. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff led an immoral life, and had therefore forfeited her right to maintenance. They further contended that she was not entitled to maintenance, unless and until she came to reside at Kara, as directed by her husband's will. The Assistant Judge found that there was no evidence of plaintiff's unchastity, and that, under the circumstances, she could not live happily at Kara, where she had no relation except the defendants, who had endeavoured to blacken her character. He awarded the plaintiff's claim. Held by the High Court, confirming the decree, that the plaintiff had "a just cause" for not living with the defendants. MULJI BHAIHANKAR v. BAI UJAM

After the husband's death, she is entitled to follow such property in the hands of her step-sons to recover her maintenance her right to which is not affected by any agreement made by her with her husband in his lifetime. A Hindu wife has no property or co-ownership in her husband's estate, in the ordinary sense, which involves independent and co-equal powers of disposition and exclusive enjoyment. Her right is merely an inchoate right to partition which she cannot transfer or assign away by her own individual act; and, unless such right has been defined by partition or otherwise, it cannot be released by her to her husband. NARADABAI v. 128. ————— Family property—Mitakshara law—Moveable ancestral property—Property liable for maintenance—Immovable property purchased with profits.—Under the Mitakshara law, moveable ancestral property which remains in the hands of a father, and has not been partitioned among his sons, is to be regarded as a fund chargeable with the maintenance of those members of the family who under Hindu law have claims for maintenance on the undivided estate of the family. All ancestral property is, while it remains undisposed of and unpartitioned, charged with the maintenance of all persons who are entitled to maintenance from the estate. Immovable property purchased with the capital or profits of ancestral moveable property does not retain the character of ancestral moveable property, but those incidents attach to it which ordinarily attach to immovable property acquired by and inherited from an ancestor. A Hindu widow with a minor son is as much entitled as a childless widow to maintenance. Where a husband dies leaving separate estates and also an undivided share in joint family property, the widow's maintenance should be met first out of the profits of the separate estates; but if these are insufficient, there is nothing in the circumstance that the husband left separate estates which would debar the widow from having recourse to the joint estate to meet the deficiency. SHRI DAYE v. the widow cannot enforce her charge for maintenance against such property in the hands of the purchaser. Quere—Whether a Hindu widow, by obtaining against her husband's heir a personal decree for maintenance unaccompanied by any declaration of a charge on the estate, does not lose her charge upon the estate. ADHIRANEE NARAIN COOMARY v. 186. ———— Charge on estate in the hands of purchaser with notice.—Notice.—In a suit for maintenance brought by a Hindu widow against her husband's brother, who was the sole surviving member of that husband's family, and against bona fide purchasers for value from him (the defendant) of certain immoveable ancestral property of the family. Held the mere circumstance that such purchasers had notice of her claim is not conclusive of the widow's rights against the property in their hands. If the property were sold in order to pay debts (not incurred for immoral purposes) of her husband, or his father, or grandfather, or for the benefit of the undivided family, or to satisfy a former decree obtained by the plaintiff herself against the same defendant for maintenance, such sale would be valid against her, whether or not the purchasers had notice of her claim. Per WAT, J.—According to the Mitakshara, sons must, from the moment of their father's death, be regarded as sole owners of the estate, yet with a liability to provide for the maintenance of their father's widow, and with a competence on the widow's part to have the estate made answerable. If the sons make a division of the estate, they must allot to their mother an equal share, and the same to any sonless widow of their father. The widow has no proprietorship in the estate before its partition, but she has an equity to a provision which the Court will enforce to guard her against attempted fraud. The debts of the deceased owner take precedence of the maintenance of the widow. The estate is properly applied, in the first instance, by the sons as managers in payment of such debts. By a sale of the property the sons cannot evade a personal liability to provide for the widow. If a mother, foregoing her claim to a separate provision out of the paternal property, resides with her sons or step-sons, and is maintained by them, she must submit to their dealing with the estate. A fraudulent alienation for the purpose of defeating her claims will not be supported, but the particular assignee for value acquires a complete title. In the case of a widow of an ordinary co-parcener as against the surviving members of the joint family, her claim being strictly to maintenance only, regulated by the circumstances of the joint family, it appears that, although she may have her maintenance made a charge on the property, yet, if she should refrain from that course, she leaves to the co-parceners an unlimited estate to deal with at their discretion and in good faith. If there is an ample estate left, out of which to provide for the widow, or, if knowing of a proposed sale, she does not take any step to secure her own interest, no imputation of bad faith, or of abetting its

can be made against the purchaser of a portion of the joint property. If the widow, on the other hand, is not accepting support from the co-parcener, if she lives apart, and if the estate is small and insufficient, it is the vendee's duty, before purchasing, to enquire into the reason for the sale, and not by a clandestine transaction to prevent the widow from asserting her right against the intending vendor. It is in this connection that the doctrine of notice becomes of importance. The knowledge of collateral rights created by agreement in equity frequently qualifies those acquired by a purchaser. The widow's right to maintenance is a right maintainable against the holders of the ancestral estate in virtue of their holding no less through the operation of the law than if it had been created by agreement, and so when the sale prevents its being otherwise satisfied, it accompanies the property as a burden annexed to it in the hands of a vendee with notice that it subsists, though equity as between the vendee and the vendor will make the property retained by the latter primarily answerable. Whether such a claim by a widow against the estate of her deceased husband in the hands of a purchaser is enforceable or not, does not depend upon whether the remainder of the estate in the hands of the heir has been exhausted. What was honestly purchased is free from her claim for ever. What was purchased in furtherance of a fraud upon her, or with knowledge of a right which would thus be prejudiced, is liable to her claim from the first. The relations of the parties are determined once for all at the moment of the sale. There is no authority for the doctrine which makes the claim of widows not entitled to a share of property, in case of partition, a real charge on the inheritance, and ranks the claim of widows who are so entitled as a mere moral obligation. In all cases it is a claim to maintenance merely, not interfering (so long as it has not been reduced to certainty by a legal transaction) with the right of the actually participant members to deal with the property at their discretion, provided this dealing is honest and for the common benefit. The reduction of the number of surviving co-parceners to a single person makes no difference in the widow's legal position. The rights and obligations of the original co-parceners fall at last to the sole survivor. The widows must be maintained by him out of the property, but he may still deal with the estate at his discretion in the absence of actual fraud or of a decree which has converted some widow's claim into an actual right in re. The purchaser from him takes a perfectly good title, and one which, if good at the time, cannot be impaired by subsequent changes in the circumstances of the vendor's family. widow's right of maintenance—Right of widow as against purchaser—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 39—Notice.—A testator, by his will, gave his widow's maintenance out of the income of his immovable estate, subject to a limited power of sale or mortgage conferred upon his executrix for a special purpose. It was found by the lower Courts that a large part of the property was sold by the executrix with the object of defeating the claim of the plaintiff, who was one of the testator's widows, and that the purchaser was aware of the fraud. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover her maintenance out of the property in the hands of the purchaser. The purchaser having been aware of the fraud, the plaintiff's right to maintenance against the property in his hands remained unaffected, whether under s. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act or the law previously in force and irrespective of the possibility of her claim being satisfied from other property. BEHARILALJI BHAGWATPRASADJI v. The fact that the maintenance claimed accrued due subsequent to the transfer does not affect the liability of the property transferred to be sold in execution of a decree for the maintenance so claimed. KULODA PRASAD CHATTERJEE v. mortgage-debt was not shown. In a suit by the plaintiff for possession it appeared that the property in question had been in the exclusive possession of another member of the family, and after his death in that of his widow, for more than 26 years; and that neither of them had concurred in the sale to the plaintiff; it was also found that the widow was entitled to possession on account of maintenance. Held that the separate possession of the widow was notice to the plaintiff of her interest in the land, and that he was not entitled to defeat it. *IMAM v. 141. ———— Charge on husband's estate—Bond fide purchaser for value without notice.—The maintenance of a Hindu widow is not, until it is fixed and charged on her deceased husband's estate by a decree or by agreement, a charge on such estate which can be enforced against a bond fide purchaser of such estate for value without notice. When the maintenance of a Hindu widow has been expressly charged on her husband's estate, a portion of such estate will be liable to such charge in the hands of a purchaser, even if it be shown that the heirs to such estate have retained enough of it to meet such charge; but such estate will not be liable if its transfer has taken place to satisfy a claim for which it is liable under Hindu law, and which under that law takes precedence of a claim of maintenance. *SHAM LAL v. A obtained a personal decree against B for maintenance; at the sale in execution of this decree a portion of the family property was sold and purchased by C. At this sale the widow gave notice that she claimed a right to recover maintenance from the family property. In a subsequent suit by A against B and C to recover arrears of maintenance, A sought to follow the property in the hands of C. Held that the fact of such notice being given at the time of the auction-sale would not affect the rights of the auction-purchaser C, he having purchased at an auction-sale held under a decree obtained in satisfaction of a valid family debt. *SOONJA KOER v. 158. ————— Daughter's right—Residence—Marriage expenses—Hindu embracing Mahomedanism.—J, a Hindu, embraced the Mahomedan religion and married a Mahomedan woman whom he took to live with him. At the time of his conversion he had a Hindu wife, who, together with her minor daughter, now instituted a suit against him, praying (1) for an allowance by way of maintenance; (2) that the allowance might be fixed as a charge on specific property belonging to the defendant; (3) for an order compelling the defendant to provide the plaintiffs with a separate house for their residence; and (4) that a sum of Rs. 4,000 might be awarded to them to defray the marriage expenses of the minor plaintiff. Held that the defendant ought not to be compelled to provide residence for the plaintiffs, inasmuch as the allowance awarded to them should cover all such expenses as maintenance and house-rent, and that the claim of Rs. 4,000 for the minor plaintiff's marriage expenses should be rejected; since it was not shown that any marriage expenses had been incurred or were at present required for her, and since if she lived to reach a marriageable age, the matter would then be in the hands of her guardian. Held, further, that the right of the wife and daughter to be maintained out of the husband's and father's property was undoubted, and that, when the Court has made an order directing a sum to be paid by way of maintenance, it has undoubtedly the power to ensure the enforcement of its order, and this could best be done by fixing the allowance to be a charge on specific property. Jamna v. 1. INFANT MARRIAGE, THEORY OF.

1. ————— Infant marriages—Presumption of age—Age of discretion.—The foundation for infant marriages among Hindus is the religious obligation which is supposed to lie on parents to provide for a daughter, so soon as she is matura viro, a husband capable of procreating children; the custom being that, when that period arrives, the infant wife permanently quits her father's house, to which she had returned after the celebration of the marriage ceremony, for that of her husband. The presumption, therefore, is that the husband, when called upon to receive his wife for permanent cohabitation, has attained the full age of adolescence, and also the age which the law fixes as that of discretion. JUMOONA DASSYA v. [3 W. R., 198]

3. ————— Guardians of daughters.—The plaintiff, the divided brother of the defendant's deceased husband, sued to obtain a declaration of his independent legal right to betroth the infant daughters of his deceased brother by the defendant to persons of his own choosing without the interference of the defendant, and of her obligation to accept any persons whom he might select and provide for the celebration of their marriages. Held that the exclusive right sought to be enforced by the plaintiff was not warranted by Hindu law, apart from the legal position and rights of the defendant as the guardian of her daughters and possessor of her husband's property, which, however, presented still stronger grounds of objection to the plaintiff's claim. NAMAHAYAM PILLAY v. 5. ———— Marriage of a girl without her father's consent—Husband and wife—Suit by the father to declare such marriage void—Factum valet.—The plaintiff, a Hindu father, sued for a declaration that the marriage of his daughter, which had been celebrated by his wife without his consent, was null and void. It appeared that the plaintiff had for about eight years voluntarily given up residence with his wife and daughters, and that he had several times been requested by his wife to get their daughter, aged eleven years, married, but had neglected to do so. The plaintiff's wife accordingly, having procured a suitable husband for their daughter, informed the plaintiff of the intended marriage; but the plaintiff, instead of approving the course taken by his wife, filed a suit, and obtained an injunction restraining his wife from celebrating the marriage. The marriage nevertheless was solemnized with due ceremony. The Court of first instance declared the marriage void. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court. —Held, confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the marriage should be supported, under the circumstances of the case, on the principle of factum valet, there being no express authority in the Hindu law-texts, making the consent of the parents and guardians of a girl a condition precedent to the validity of a marriage. The plaintiff, having been informed of his wife's intention to marry their daughter, made no bona fide attempt to marry her, and, after entirely foregoing his claim to all control over his daughter for many years, merely attempted to assert his right without any regard to her interests, and with the sole object of annoying the mother, from whom he had been long separated with his own consent. Quære—Whether Civil Courts would set aside a marriage if a clear case was established of fraud, by both the parties intermarrying, on the rights of the father as guardian of his daughter for the purposes of marriage. KRISHNACHAND LAICHAND v. 6. ———— Custody—Guardianship—Right of father to give his daughter in marriage—Conduct of father forfeiting such right—Suit by a father to restrain his wife from giving their daughter in marriage without his consent.—The plaintiff and B, the second defendant, were husband and wife belonging to the Prabhu caste, and lived together in the house of the first defendant, who was B's father, until the year 1860. In 1877 a daughter S had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife B to join him with their daughter S. B refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—nam age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters—demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter, and for an injunction against her marriage without his consent. On filing this suit, he obtained a rule nisi for an injunction against the defendants. Held that, pending the hearing of this suit, he was entitled to the injunction asked for. NANABHAI GANPATRAY DHAIRYAVAN v. 7. ———— Alleged improper marriage of minor threatened pending application for guardianship—Injunction against person not party to application and out of jurisdiction—Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 11, 12—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622.—During the pendency of an application for guardianship of a minor girl, it was alleged on behalf of the applicant, the mother, that an improper marriage of the girl was going to be performed by the father, and an injunction was prayed for to restrain various persons (including the present petitioner, who was not a party to the proceeding) from marrying or allowing the marriage of the minor. The lower Court had granted the injunction. Held that s. 12 of the Guardian and Wards Act authorizes the Court to make such order for the temporary protection of the person of the minor as it thinks proper, and this power is not exercisable only after the production of the minor. Held, further, that the mere fact that a person resides outside the jurisdiction of the Court is not per se sufficient to prevent the Court from granting an injunction to restrain him from committing an act in a case such as the present. Held also that this was not a case in which the High Court ought to interfere under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code. HARENDRA NATH CHOWDHURY v. BINDA RANI DASGI [2 C. W. N., 521]

8. ———— Marriage of a girl without her father's consent—Suit by father to have marriage declared void—Factum valet—Applicability of the doctrine to marriage.—Under the Hindu law, a duly solemnized marriage cannot be set aside in the absence of fraud or force on the ground that the father did not give his consent to the marriage. The texts relating to the eligibility of persons who can claim the right of giving a girl in marriage are directory, and not mandatory. MULCHAND KUTSKH v. BHUPHIA I. L. R., 22 Bom., 812

9. ———— Guardianship—Paternal relatives—Their authority to give a girl in marriage—Civil Court's jurisdiction to interfere with this authority.—The general authority, failing the father, of the paternal relatives to dispose of a girl in marriage is recognized by the Hindu law as a part of the guardianship which is correlative as a right and a duty to her dependance both as a female and as an infant. But those who seek the aid of the Civil Courts, in order to give effect to this authority, may not improperly be put upon terms which may appear necessary in order to prevent the authority from being abused to the injury of the infant. Where a father or mother is the guardian, the intervention of a law Court can seldom be necessary or desirable. In the case of very gross misconduct and disregard of paternal duty, the Court may interfere even in the case of a father. A Hindu died, leaving a widow and an infant daughter named B. After his death, his widow was forced, through the unkindness of her mother-in-law, to seek refuge at her parents' house. There she died about eighteen months after her husband's death. The orphan B was then brought up by her maternal uncles, S and G. When B became ten or eleven years old, her paternal uncle and paternal grandmother sought, under Act IX of 1861, to take possession of the minor B from the custody of her maternal uncles. This application was resisted by S and G, on the ground that the petitioners had no right to give the girl in marriage, and that their object was to marry the girl to an old Bhatia in Bombay for a large sum of money. The Court found that several Bhatia girls of Dharamgaon, where the parties resided, had of late been married to old Bhatias in Bombay, the girls' relatives receiving large sums of money. And as the girl had never lived with the petitioners, the Court ordered that she should, for the present, continue to live with her maternal uncles until the petitioners found a suitable husband for her, to be approved by the Court. Of the persons selected by the petitioners, one was approved by the Court. He was a resident of Vaisapur, a town in the Nizam's dominions. The Court passed an order authorizing the petitioners to give the girl in marriage to this person, and directing the girl to be made over into the petitioner's custody a month before the day fixed for the marriage. Against this order S and G appealed to the High Court. Held that the petitioners, as paternal relatives of the girl, had, under the Hindu law, a preferential right to dispose of the girl in marriage; but as they had never taken care of the girl, it was necessary, in the interests of the minor, to put them upon terms to prevent the possibility of their abusing their authority to the minor's prejudice. Held also that the girl should not be married to a person living in foreign territory, as the effect of marriage with such a person would be to place the minor beyond the protection of the Court in British India. Held also that the girl ought not to be forced into marrying a person whom she did not like. SHRIDHAR v. (24 W. R., 207)

12. — Betrothal, Suit to enforce—Ceremonies of betrothal.—The plaintiff, on behalf of her infant son, sued the father and guardian of M B to recover possession of M B, alleging that M B had been betrothed to her son, and that, under the Hindu law, betrothment was the same as marriage and could not be repudiated, and that the defendant had, on demand, refused to give up M B. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the betrothment had been repudiated, as the family to which the plaintiff belonged were guilty of female infanticide, and that it would be illegal, under the Hindu law, to enter into relationship with it. Held that, as according to Hindu law a betrothment is effected by the bride and bridegroom walking seven steps hand in hand during a particular recital, and the contract is perfected upon their arriving at the seventh step, and may be enforced by the husband on completion of the time, and as the evidence adduced did not show, nor was it alleged or pretended, that any betrothment had been effected or perfected in the way above described, the suit was unmaintainable. NOBUT SINGH v. 13. — Breach of promise of marriage—Reciprocal contingent contract—Damages—Uparyaman—Malai Bhatia caste.—The plaintiffs alleged that by a written agreement, dated the 18th March 1882, the first defendant and her deceased son L agreed that the second defendant A, who was the daughter of the first defendant, should be given in marriage to the second plaintiff, who was the son of plaintiff No. 1; and that the betrothal of these two persons took place accordingly. The agreement was executed by the said L, as eldest male member of his family, in the name of his deceased father. In pursuance of this agreement, the plaintiffs paid to the first defendant ₹700 as uparyaman, and they presented A with ornaments and clothes of considerable value. The plaintiffs complained that the first defendant subsequently refused to carry out the contract of marriage, and had married her daughter K (defendant No. 2) to another person. They claimed in this suit to recover the ornaments and clothes, together with the ₹700 paid to the first defendant as uparyaman and ₹10,000 as damages. The first defendant was sued both in her personal capacity and as heir and legal representative of her son L. The first defendant pleaded that neither she nor the second defendant were bound by the betrothal agreement, as they were not parties to it; that the contract had been a contingent contract, inasmuch as her son L had agreed to give K (defendant No. 2) in marriage to the second plaintiff only on condition that he (L) should obtain in marriage U, the daughter of the third plaintiff, and that L and U were accordingly betrothed, that L had died in 1884, and that the contract had been thereby determined; that she had been willing to renew it, and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U, but that the plaintiff had declined this offer. In proof of her allegation that the contract was a reciprocal contingent contract, the first defendant relied upon the following clause in the agreement: "At the time when the marriages are to take place the marriages of the two girls are to be performed together. When you shall give your daughter in marriage, I also am at the same time to give my daughter in marriage." Held that the agreement of betrothal was not a reciprocal contingent contract; and that the first defendant had committed a breach of the agreement by not giving her daughter K in marriage to the second plaintiff; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the first defendant the value of the ornaments and the ₹700 paid by the plaintiffs as upariyaman together with ₹600 damages for the breach of contract. The second defendant, being a minor, was held not liable, and the suit as against her was dismissed. MULJI THAKERSHY v. GOMTI

14. — Suit against father of betrothed girl to have betrothal declared void and for damages for breach of contract.—Contract of marriage—Kapole Bania caste.—The plaintiff, who had been betrothed to the defendant's daughter K, sued for a declaration that, unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before the expiration of the month of Baisakh 1952 (May-June 1896), the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff, and that the betrothal was void, and for ₹25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage. The defendant pleaded that his daughter K was not willing to marry the plaintiff within the period mentioned, and that he had no right to force his daughter against her will. At the trial K stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. K was born on the 2nd May 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January 1896). Before filing the suit, the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time, and that he would not force her to marry against her will. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal, and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaintiff assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a loose position until Baisakh 1952. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry K at any time before the end of Baisakh did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that K had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. PURSHOTAMDAS TRIBHOVANDAS v. 17. — Ceremony of nandimukh or bridhi-shradh—Restitution of conjugal rights—Consent of lawful guardian—Presumption of validity of marriage—Non-performance of ceremonies.—The ceremony of nandimukh or bridhi-shradh is not an essential of Hindu marriage, nor would the want of consent by the lawful guardian necessarily invalidate such marriage. In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the fact of the celebration of marriage having been established, the presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, is that all the necessary ceremonies have been complied with. BEINDABUN CHUNDEA KURMOKAR v. 28. — Marriage without consent of the father of the girl.—Under the Hindu law, if a girl is given in marriage by her mother and all the necessary rites are duly performed, and there is no question of force or fraud and no other legal impediment to the marriage, the marriage will not be invalid, merely because the consent of the girl's father has not been obtained. *Base Rulyat v. 29. — Conditional marriage—Restitution of conjugal rights—Husband and wife—Kudwa Kunbi caste—Custom—Public policy.—The plaintiff, a member of the Kudwa Kunbi caste, sued in 1890 for restitution of conjugal rights, alleging that he had been married to the first defendant in 1927 (1870). The defendants alleged that at the date of the marriage the parties were only a month old; that the marriage was a mits (exchange) marriage, and that by the contract the plaintiff's father was bound, as a condition of his obtaining the second defendant's daughter for his son, to provide a girl to be married to the second defendant's son. They alleged that such conditional marriages were a custom of the caste, and they denied that the condition had been performed by the plaintiff's father. They further alleged that in 1936 (1879) the plaintiff's father, finding that he could not perform the condition, had passed a release (the plaintiff himself then being a minor) to defendant No. 2 (the father of defendant No. 1) giving up all claims to defendant No. 1; that a dispute having subsequently arisen after the plaintiff had attained his majority, the matter was referred to the members of the caste, who decided that within a certain fixed time the plaintiff should provide a girl for the son of defendant No. 2, and that, on the plaintiff failing to do so, the marriage was dissolved. The Court found that by the custom of the caste the marriage in 1927 (1870) between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 was only a conditional marriage; that the release of 1936 (1879) operated to cancel the marriage, and that in any case the plaintiff's failure to find a girl for the second defendant's son, in accordance with the decision of the caste, dissolved the marriage. Held that the plaintiff had not established his right to the restitution of defendant No. 1 as his wife. The alleged custom was not contrary to public policy. According to the custom relied on, there was no complete and binding marriage within the intention of the parents of the parties, although the ordinary religious ceremonies were performed. Such a transaction could not be regarded as immoral from any point of view. The Hindu law leaves it entirely to the parents to marry their daughters, and although, according to the strict Brahminical law, a marriage is complete when the religious ceremony has been performed, there would seem to be no sufficient reason for refusing to recognize a custom, at any rate among the lower castes, by which such transactions, rendered necessary by the paucity of women in the caste, although performed with religious ceremonies, are still regarded by the parents on both sides as incomplete and conditional marriages. *BAI UOMI v. Neither the disobedience of the Court's order, nor the disregard of the preferable claims of the male relations, would invalidate the marriage. Quere—Whether the marriage of a minor eight or nine years old can be regarded as falling within the scope of s. 24 of Act VIII of 1890, especially when the marriage of a minor female terminates the power of the guardian of the person? *BAI DIWALI v. 31. — Asura form of marriage—Nagar Vissa Vania caste—Pala, Giving of.—The Hindu law, at least as evidenced by usage, though it permits the Asura form of marriage among the mercantile and servile classes, does not prohibit to those classes the more approved forms of marriage. The form of marriage in use among the Nagar Vissa section of the Vania caste corresponds to one or other of the approved forms, and not to the Asura, and the giving of pala does not constitute a purchasing of the bride. *IN THE GOODS OF NATHIBAI. 40. — Re-marriage—Presumption of legality of marriage—Act XV of 1856.—L sued for possession of certain immoveable property as the widow and heiress of a Hindu, a Gaur Rajput, and governed by the law of the Mitakshara, alleging him to have been at the time of his death separate from the other members of his family. The suit was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the grounds that the plaintiff, at the time when her connection with the deceased began, was the widow of one of his cousins; that, according to the custom of the caste, the marriage of a widow with a relative of her husband was invalid; and that consequently the plaintiff could not be considered the lawfully-married wife of the deceased, and entitled as such to the inheritance of his estate. Held that the plaintiff having in the first Court given evidence to show that she was married to the deceased and that her two infant daughters were the offspring of that marriage, and looking to the provisions of Act XV of 1856, the presumption was in favour of the legality of such marriage until the contrary was shown,—i.e., until the defendants had established that, according to the custom of the caste of Gaur Rajputa, the marriage of a cousin with his deceased cousin's widow was prohibited. LAOHEMAN KUAR v. HINDU LAW—MARRIAGE—continued.

6. EVIDENCE AS TO, AND PROOF OF, MARRIAGE.

45. — Evidence of marriage—Inference and probabilities weighed against direct testimony.—Upon a widow's claim for maintenance the question was whether the relation between her and a person, deceased many years before her suit, whom she alleged to have been her husband, had been the relation of marriage or of concubinage. The decision of this question, one way or the other, rested on considerations whether the substantial testimony of witnesses, who gave their testimony to the fact of the marriage in their presence, was, or was not, outweighed and negatived in judicial estimation by the antecedent and inherent improbability that such a marriage, under the circumstances of the parties alleged to have entered into it, would have taken place. The oral evidence was, however, corroborated by inferences drawn from several facts well established. The present suit was defended by the successor in estate of the deceased, and it was common ground between this defendant and the plaintiff that there had been cohabitation between the deceased and the latter. This narrowed the effect of the condition and circumstances of the deceased at the time of the alleged marriage upon the question whether it was a fact. The ordinary criteria afforded by conduct contributed but little aid to remove doubt. In the result, the conclusion of the Judicial Committee was that the direct oral testimony had not been overborne, but should prevail against the improbability presented by the case that such a marriage should have taken place. The affirmative of it was maintained, and the widow's claim allowed. LUCKMI KORB v. ROGHU NATH DAS I. L. R., 27 Cal., 971 [L. R., 27 I. A., 142 4 C. W. N., 685]

7. LEGITIMACY OF CHILDREN.

46. — Procreation before marriage—Legitimacy of children.—Under Hindu law, it is not necessary, in order to render a child legitimate, that the procreation as well as the birth should take place after marriage. OOLAGAPPA CHETTY v. 47. — Presumption of legitimacy—Treatment of child by father as legitimate.—A marriage de facto being established and supported by recognition by the deceased zamindar of the children of the marriage as legitimate, the very strongest evidence will be required to show that the law denied to such children their presumable legal status on the ground of their mother's incapacity to contract a marriage. The legal presumption in favour of a child who was born in his father's house of a mother lodged and apparently treated as a wife, who was treated as a legitimate child by his father, and whose legitimacy was disputed after the father's death, was a safe and proper one to be made, and the opposing case had not, as it ought to have been, strictly proved. RAMAMANI AMMAL v. KULANTHAI NAUCHEAR [17 W. R., 1 : 14 Moore's I. A., 346]

HINDU LAW—MARRIAGE—continued.8. RESTRAINT ON, OR DISSOLUTION OF, MARRIAGE.

48. — Injunction to restrain marriage pending suit—Medical examination—Impotency.—In a suit against a Hindu who had been outcasted for offering his daughter in marriage to an old and impotent man, the Court granted an injunction to restrain the marriage pending the suit, and held that the lower Courts properly refused to cause the intended husband in this case to be medically examined as to his alleged impotency, he not being a party to the suit, and there being no provision of law authorizing such a procedure. KANAKI RAM v. BIDDYA RAM. . . . I. L. R., 1 All., 549

49. — Loss of caste, Effect of, on marriage tie—Caste, Question of.—While the Courts have generally accepted the decisions of properly-constituted punchayets on questions of caste, they have accepted them, subject to the qualification that the decision of the punchayet does not estop the Courts from enquiring into the civil rights of any member of the caste, and securing to him the enjoyment of such rights if he be found not to be precluded from the enjoyment of them by the shastras or the particular usages of his caste. It would be extremely inconvenient to hold that by a deprivation of caste, which may be temporary, a member of a caste loses his marital rights, so as to confer on his wife the power of contracting a second marriage. It is a general principle of Hindu law that the degradation of the husband from caste does not dissolve the marriage tie. BISHNABUZ v. MATAGHOLAM. . . . [2 N. W., 300]

In 1881 K died and S claimed his estate. Held that, according to Hindu law, K died an outcast and degraded, and that, as his degradation was unatoned for, the marriage became absolutely dissolved, and no right of inheritance remained to S. *SINAMMAL v. Mahomedanism. Held that illegitimacy is under the Hindu law no absolute disqualification for marriage, and that, when one or both the contracting parties to a marriage are illegitimate, the marriage must be regarded as valid, if they are recognized by their caste people as belonging to the same caste. Held also that there is no authority in Hindu law for the proposition that an apostate is absolved from all civil obligations, and that, so far as the matrimonial bond is concerned, such a view would be contrary to the spirit of that law which regards it as indissoluble, and that accordingly the marriage between R and D was not under the Hindu law dissolved by her conversion to Mahomedanism. *Rahmed Beebee v. 1. REQUISITES FOR PARTITION.

1. ———— Necessaries to create partition—Definition of shares—Independent enjoyment.—Under the Hindu law, two things at least are necessary to constitute partition: the shares must be defined, and there must be distinct and independent enjoyment. SHEO DYAL TEWARER v. JUDONATH TEWARER. SHEO DYAL TEWARER v. BISHONATH TEWARER. SHIB DYAL TEWARER v. BISHONATH TEWARER. JUDONATH TEWARER v. BISHONATH TEWARER. 9 W. R., 61

2. ———— Evidence of partition—Partition without actual division.—Under the Mitakshara law, there may be a partition in estate without any actual division of the lands into parcels, and allotment of those parcels to the different sharers to be held by them in severalty. JOSODA KOONWAR v. GOURIN BYJONATH SARAN SINGH. 6 W. R., 189

SORHA KOORER v. HURDEY NARAIN MOHAJUN [25 W. R., 97]

3. ———— Intention to divide—Partition without division by metes and bounds.—An actual partition by metes and bounds is not necessary to render a division of undivided property complete. But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves, with regard to particular property, that it shall henceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and each member thenceforth has in the estate a definite and certain share which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided. APPOVIN v. RAMA SUBBA AIYAN [8 W. R., P. C., 1: 11 Moore's I. A., 75]

4. ———— Declaration of intention to divide—Partition without division by metes and bounds.—Quere—Is a mere signification of intention on the part of a joint Hindu family sufficient to constitute a separation without an actual partition by metes and bounds? *SADABART PERSHAD SAROO v. HINDU LAW—PARTITION—continued.1. REQUISITES FOR PARTITION—continued.

5. ———— Declaration of intention to divide.—According to Hindu law, the declaration of an intention to become divided in estate amounts to a valid separation, though not immediately perfected by an actual partition of the estate by metes and bounds. VATO KOER v. ROWBHUN SINGH [8 W. R., 82]

6. ———— Intention of parties.—In ascertaining whether property once joint has become divided and separate, regard must be had to the act and intentions of the co-sharers, but when the character of the property has once been ascertained, the law fixes the course of succession. A partition between surviving co-sharers and the widow of a deceased co-sharer may operate as a complete severance of the joint property. RAM PERSHAD v. CHAINEBAM. 1 N. W., 11: Ed. 1873, 10

7. ———— Arrangement by deed to effect separation.—An arrangement contained in a deed duly executed by the members of a joint Hindu family, to effect a separation of the property, is sufficient prima facie evidence of a valid separation under Hindu law, and in such a case an actual division by metes and bounds is not necessary. KULPONATH DASS v. MEWAR LALL. 9 W. R., 302

8. ———— Agreement to divide property—Intention of parties.—As regards the joint property of a Hindu family, there may be a division of right and interest, which will operate to change the character of the ownership from joint to separate, although it may not be intended at once to perfect it by an actual partition by metes and bounds; and therefore the agreement of a family to divide the proceeds of the joint property among its members in definite shares, with the intention that each should hold his allotted share in severalty, severs the joint interest, and extinguishes the rights springing from united family ownership. RAMKISSEN SINGH v. SHEONUNDUN SINGH. 23 W. R., P. C., 412

S. C. in High Court

9. ———— Agreement for partition—Mitakshara law—Onus probandi.—According to the Mitakshara, an agreement for a partition, although not carried out by actual partition of the property, is sufficient to constitute a division of the family, so as to entitle the widow of a deceased brother to succeed to his share of the ancestral property in preference to the surviving brothers. The fact of the family having separate house and field is, according to the Mitakshara, sufficient evidence of partition. The onus of proving re-union is upon the party pleading that there has been a re-union after partition. SURANENI VENKATA GOPALA NARASIMHA ROY v. SURANENI LAKSHMI VENKAMA ROY [8 B. L. R., P. HINDU LAW—PARTITION—continued.1. REQUISITES FOR PARTITION—continued.

10. ———— Effect of deed as creating or not creating partition.—A, the son of a deceased zamindar, sued B and C, his widow and brother, for possession of the zamindari, which was impartible. In order to prove that C was divided from the late zamindar, A filed and proved a deed of partition executed by them in respect of their moveable property and of a house, which concluded as follows: "There shall be connection only by relationship, but there shall be no pecuniary connection between us." Held that the deed effected only a partial partition, and that the last clause must be referred to the co-parcener's right in partible property described in the instrument, and did not operate as a release of any right of succession to impartible property. PABVATHI v. THIRUMALAI
[I. L. R., 10 Mad., 334]

11. ———— Effect of agreement to divide.—To constitute a partition, there need not be an actual partition by metes and bounds. An agreement to divide is sufficient to constitute partition. Two brothers drew up a memorandum of partition, whereby they agreed to divide the family property in equal shares, and provided that, if at any future time their sons did not agree and there were any partition, they should exercise ownership in accordance with this document; neither was to take more than was mentioned in the document. Held that this agreement constituted a partition between the brothers, and was binding on their descendants. ANANTA BALACHARYA v. DAMODHAR MAKUND
[I. L. R., 13 Bom., 25]

12. ———— Agreement to hold separately.—To effect a partition of ancestral property, there must be, in the absence of division by metes and boundaries, at any rate an agreement that each party interested shall henceforth enjoy the produce of a certain definite share of the joint property. ASHABAI v. TYER HAJI RAHIMTULLA
[I. L. R., 9 Bom., 115]

13. ———— Unequivocal act or declaration of intention to separate—Suit for declaration of right by one member of joint family.—Though partition by metes and bounds is not necessary to effect a separation of a joint Hindu family, there must be some unequivocal act or declaration on the part of the family of their intention to be separate. Held that a suit for declaration of his right by one of the members, without stating that he asked for a divided or undivided share, was not a sufficient declaration of such intention. IN RE PHUL KOERI alias GHINA KOERI

15. ———— Partition effected without taking into account a minor co-parcener—Invalid partition.—A partition effected without reserving any share for a minor member of the family and without the consent of some one authorized to act on his behalf is invalid as against the minor. Three brothers, S, L, and K, were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1862, S and L divided the whole of the family property between them without reserving any share for their brother K, who was then a minor. K lived with L as a member of his family. L died in 1867, leaving a childless widow, with whom K continued to live till his death in 1876. K left an infant son (the plaintiff), only a year old. Subsequently S died in 1887, leaving two widows without issue. In 1889 the plaintiff, being still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover either the whole or one-third of the family property in the possession of the widows of L and S. The principal defences to this suit were (1) that it was time-barred, and (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim more than one-third of the property in suit. Held that the partition made by S and L in 1862 was invalid, as it was made without reserving any share for their minor brother K and without taking him into account. K's son was therefore entitled to recover the whole of the ancestral property as the sole surviving male member of the family. KRISHNA-BAI v. KHANGOWDA . . . I. L. R., 13 Bom., 197

16. ———— Separate appropriation, holding, and enjoyment—Mitakshara law—Minor—Joint family.—Where there was a separate appropriation, as well as a separate holding and enjoyment of distinct shares, it was held sufficient to constitute a legal partition under Mitakshara law, following Apparier v. Rama Subba Aiyar, 11 Moore's I. A., 75. The fact of one of the members of the family being a minor is not sufficient to render the partition invalid, provided the interests of the minor are properly represented as by a manager appointed under s. 12, Act XL of 1858. Every member of a joint undivided family has a right to demand a partition of his own share. DEWANTI KUNWAR v. DWARRANATH 8 B. L. R., 383 note [10 W. R., 273]

17. ———— Mitakshara law—Deed declaring each member entitled to definite share of property.—By a deed of sharakatnama the members of a Hindu family, governed by the Mitakshara law, declared that each of the members was entitled to a definite fractional part of the whole estate. Held that this was not sufficient to constitute a valid partition according to the Hindu law. Apparier v.

18. ———— Agreement to separate—Appropriation and recognition of separate holdings.—To constitute property separate property, it is not necessary that a division should be made by a revenue officer, nor is it necessary that the estate itself should be partitioned in accordance with a private agreement of the co-sharers by metes and bounds. It is sufficient that the co-sharers hold recognized shares, the profits of which shares they severally enjoy and appropriate. JEONER v. DHIREM KOORER

19. ———— Construction of deed—Intention of parties—Alteration of status of parties.—In all cases of division of joint property not carried out by a partition by metes and bounds, the question whether the status of the family has been thereby altered is a question of intention of the parties, to be inferred from the instruments which they have executed and the acts which they have done to effect such division. An ikrarnama, which did not recite a previous status of indivision and did not in terms declare that the parties thereto should thenceforth be an undivided family, was construed, nevertheless, to mean that the parties would thenceforth hold and enjoy the property, which was the subject of it, in severalty. *DOORGA PERSHAD v. 21. ———— Intention to divide.—Where a widow sued to recover from the brothers of her deceased husband a share of property which remained undivided at his death, a division of part of the family property having taken place during the lifetime of the husband, and she alleged an agreement to divide the rest of the property,—Held that the plaintiff had no right to recover the property which was actually undivided at the death of her husband, an intention to divide without more not being evidences of partition. The doctrine propounded in a 291 of Strange's H. L., dissented from. TIMMI REDDY v. ACHAMMA

22. ———— Decision of punchayet as to division—Evidences of partition.—In a suit in which the question was whether there had been a division, the sole evidence of division was the decision of a punchayet reciting that division; the question, however, not having been at all material to the point then in dispute. Held that the decision was not sufficient evidences of the division. *RAMAKRISHNA RAYA PANDAY v. 23. ———— Agreement to hold in defined shares.—Suit by a widow to recover her husband's share, whom she alleged to be a divided member of a Hindu family, under an agreement to the following effect: "When we lived together, a disagreement arising amongst females, we have divided. . . . Thus we shall from this date divide and enjoy the income of the land. When the moiety of lands belonging to our uncle S in the said three villages shall be equally divided, we shall also share our moiety equally, and obtain separate pottahs. . . . We hold no pecuniary concern." Held that, when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to the particular property that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share in the estate, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually divided. *Appovier v. brother, to be zamindar of P. This instrument recited that by the death of R, his uncle, without male issue, V had become entitled to succeed to his estates, unless R's widow, then pregnant, should be delivered of a son. The instrument then provided that, in the event of the said widow giving birth to a son, V should retain the zamindari P, but that, if she gave birth to a daughter, V and his offspring should have no interest in the said zamindari, of which M should be sole zamindar, allowing maintenance to C, the third brother. R's widow gave birth to a daughter. V entered on possession of R's estates, and M took over the zamindari P. C died without issue. M died in 1835, and was succeeded by his only son D, who died in 1861, leaving a widow, but no sons. In a suit instituted in 1878 by S, a son of V, to recover certain villages belonging to the zamindari P from defendants in possession and claiming as purchasers for value from D,—Held by the Judicial Committee, reversing the judgments of the Courts below, that the instrument of 1829 was a renunciation by V for himself and his descendants of all interest in P, either as the head or as a junior member of the joint family, and that its effect was to make P, with its incidents of impartibility and peculiar course of succession, the property of the brothers M and C, as effectually as if, in the case of an ordinary partition between the elder brother on the one hand and the two younger brothers on the other, a particular property had been assigned to the latter; and that consequently, as between D and the defendants of V, the zamindari was the separate property of the former, whose rights, if he left any undisposed of, passed on his death to his widow, notwithstanding the undivided status of the family, in accordance with the rule of succession affirmed in the Sriranganga case, 9 Moore's I. A., 539. SIVAGANNA TEVAR v. PERIASAMI I. L. R., 1 Mad., 312

25. ————— Definement of shares—Intended separation—Separate enjoyment of profits.—Definement of shares in joint ancestral property recorded as separate estate in the revenue records in pursuance of an alleged intended separation between the members of a joint and undivided Hindu family does not necessarily amount to such separation, which must be shown by the best evidence, viz., separate enjoyment of profits, or an unmistakable intention to separate interests which was carried into effect. *AMBIKA DAT v. 26. ————— Evidence of separation—Definement of shares in ancestral property.—A four-anna ancestral share in a zamindari village was owned by two brothers in which the share of H, son of one of the brothers, was one-half, the remaining half being the share of the plaintiffs, the descendants of the other brother. In the village records there had been a definement of shares followed by entries of separate interest in the revenue records, and since 1264 Fasli the two plaintiffs had each been recorded as the owner of a one-anna share and H of a two-anna share thereof. The entire four-anna share had been in the possession of mortgagees from the year 1844 excepting the air lands of which H held separately his own share, viz., 10 bighas. On the 7th July 1883, H executed a deed of gift of his two-anna share in favour of the defendants and caused mutation of names to be made in their favour, surrendering to them at the same time possession of the air land. H died on 21st January 1884, leaving neither son, widow, nor daughter, and the plaintiffs were his heirs-at-law. They brought this suit to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the air land from the defendants. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, and on appeal the District Judge affirmed the decree, holding that the four-anna share was not joint and undivided property between the co-sharers, and that H was in separate possession of the two-anna share of which the defendants were the donees. On second appeal it was contended that, inasmuch as since 1844 there could have been no separate enjoyment of the four-anna share which was in the possession of the mortgagees, the evidence afforded by separate registration could not prove actual separation. Held that from evidence of definement of shares followed by entries of separate interest in the revenue records, if there be nothing to explain it, separation as to estate may be inferred. Joint family property in the hands of mortgagees may be separated in estate, although there could be no separate enjoyment of the shares so separated. AMBIKA DAT v. SUEHMANI KHAR, I. L. R., 1 All., 437, discussed. RAM LAL v. DATT DAT

(I. L. R., 10 All., 490)

27. ————— Execution of document intended to operate as a severance—Power of father to alter status of family.—A partition made by the father is binding on the sons not only in respect of the father's share, but also of their own shares, provided that it is made subject to the restrictions mentioned in the Hindu law. It becomes obligatory by the will of the father as regulated and restrained by the law, irrespective of the consent of the sons. When a father having five sons, three by one wife and two by another, executed in his last illness a document whereby, after retaining a small portion for himself, he directed that the family property should be divided into three-fifths and two-fifths shares, with the manifest intention that from the date of the execution of the document it should operate as a severance (1) of the interest of his sons by one wife from that of his sons by the other, and (2) of the interest of all his sons from his own during his life; but neither the guardian of the infant sons nor the eldest son, who was of age, were parties to the instrument,—Held that this was not a will, but a partition; that it was competent to the father thus to alter the status of his sons; that the question was whether the transaction was bona fide and in conformity with Hindu law, and not one of contract as in the case of a partition between brothers. *KANDASAMI v. 28. ———— Intention as to joint or several ownership.—No right vests in any member of a joint Hindu family to a specific share in the family property until some act has been done which has the effect of turning the joint ownership into a several ownership. This may be done by signification of intention. It is by such signification of intention taking place, having the effect of making the share of each member both several and defined, that a member of a joint Hindu family is enabled to dispose of his own share by sale whilst the family remains joint. *RAGHURAMUD DOSS v. 29. ———— Ascertainment and definition of shares—Income enjoyed in distinct shares.—In order to show separation in a Hindu family, it is not necessary to establish a partition of the joint estate into separate shares or holdings; it is enough that there has been ascertainment and definition of the extent of right and interest of the several co-sharers in the whole, and of the proportion of participation each of them is to have in the income derived from the property, to effect a severance and destruction of the joint tenancy, so to speak, and to convert it into a tenancy-in-common. Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar, 11 Moore's I. A., 76, followed. Held therefore, where, although the ancestral property of a Hindu family had not been formally and completely partitioned by metes and bounds, the income of it had been enjoyed by the different members of it in distinct and defined shares, that the family was not a joint and undivided Hindu family. *ADI DEO NARAIN SINGH v. 30. ———— Intention—Suit for separate share of joint estate.—Although a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family against his co-sharers for a separate share of the joint estate be not in terms a suit for partition, yet, if it appear that the intention of the plaintiff was to obtain the share which he would be entitled to on a separation, and the decree passed in the suit assigns him that share, such decree does in fact effect a partition, at all events, of rights, which, under the doctrine laid down in the case of *Appovier v. two minor sons, and the names of the four brothers were recorded under the Land Registration Act with the specification of the shares of each. 33. ———— Decree effecting partition—Separate estate.—In a suit brought by the younger of two Hindu brothers against his elder brother for the partition of lands belonging to an ancestral joint estate and against other defendants, claiming as encumbrancers or as absolute owners of portions of the said lands under titles derived from the plaintiff's father and elder brother, for the recovery of the plaintiff's share of the said lands freed from the interests claimed by these defendants, except in so far as such interests might be valid as against the plaintiff under the Hindu law, the Court passed an order to the effect that the property claimed was partible, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety, but directed that, with a view to ascertain how far the moiety awarded to the plaintiff was affected by the acts of the plaintiff's father and elder brother, a commissioner should be appointed to investigate accounts and report thereon to the Court. Before the enquiry thus directed to be made was completed, and before a final decree was passed for the division of the property, the plaintiff died. Held that the order passed by the Court was tantamount to a declaratory decree determining that there was to be a partition of the estate into moieties, and making the brothers separate in estate from its date, if they had not previously become so; and consequently that the plaintiff's interest in the property in suit would not pass to the defendant, his elder brother, as joint estate by survivorship, but to his own representatives as separate estate. *Appovier v. 84. ———— Decree for partition—Decree awarding plaintiff's share, but postponing possession thereof till plaintiff attained majority Effect of such decree.—On the 21st February 1894, a decree in a partition suit provided as follows: "Plaintiff is a minor twelve years old; until he attains twenty-one years, N (defendant) should for the next nine years annually deliver to him twenty maunds of paddy, and for this year ten maunds; after that plaintiff should be given one-sixth of the family lands; until then defendant is not to alienate the lands." The minor died, and in 1897 his widow, S, as his heir, applied for execution of the decree, claiming seventy maunds of paddy, being the amount due at the rate specified in the decree. It was objected that she was not entitled to execute, inasmuch as the decree had not effected a partition, and that the property at his death still remained joint family property, which passed to the male survivors of the family, and that she was only entitled to maintenance. Held that the effect of the decree was to make the applicant's husband a divided member of his family. It awarded him a one-sixth share of the family estate, and assigned to him a separate allowance. The mere fact that it postponed the actual possession of the share until he had attained the age of twenty-one years made no difference. The share vested in him from the date of the decree, and descended to his heirs. LAKSHMAN SARKA v. NARAYAN LAKSHMAN . I. L. R., 24 Bom., 183

85. ———— Death of plaintiff subsequent to decree for partition—Right of survivorship—Effect on vested right of plaintiff's representative.—A decree for partition operates as a severance of the joint ownership. Where, therefore, M, a minor and only son, by his next friend sued his father and certain allies of the family property for partition and obtained a decree, and subsequent to decree and pending appeal the plaintiff died, and M's mother was brought on the record as deceased plaintiff's legal representative, Held that the rights of M's representative were not affected, as they would have been had the plaintiff died before decree; the right of survivorship which the defendant then possessed being extinguished by the decree. SUBBARAYA MUDALI v. MANIKA MUDALI

86. ———— Distribution of family estate, followed by separate possession, equivalent to informal partition.—The Courts below found that a distribution of ancestral estate among the members of a family had taken place in former years, and had been followed by continuous possession, without their having any intention to re-adjust or to hold on behalf of the family. The right of an individual member to claim another partition was therefore negatived. The parties, who had long discontinued joint residence, were members of a family consisting at the time of the distribution of four sons left by a Sikh Dewan, deceased. The son of one brother now claimed from the son of another, joining a third who still survived, partition of the property which had descended from the grandfather, with the

87. ———— Arrangement for separate enjoyment.—A Jain, who was subject to the Aliyasantana law, made a will, whereby he disposed of the property of his family in favour of certain persons and died. The plaintiff, a female, the sole surviving member of the testator's family, sued to recover so much of the property as she might be entitled to. In deciding what was the extent of the property which the plaintiff was entitled to inherit, certain documents adduced as evidencing partition of the family property were held to evidence merely arrangements for separate enjoyment. SANKU v. 88. ———— Separate enjoyment of portions of family property for several years—Entries in survey records—Dealings with portions of property—Sole enjoyment of a certain property by a branch of the family—Separate acquisition.—In a partition suit, it being found that the several branches of a Hindu family had lived separate for forty or fifty years, had enjoyed during that period separate and distinct portions of the family property or portions of the property in regular rotation, and had dealt with the separate portions in every respect as their own property, and that in the survey records the lands were entered in the names of the several branches in respect of their separate shares, Held that the evidence as to the mode of enjoyment by the several branches of a family during so long a period ought to be taken as establishing a tacit agreement of enjoyment according to their shares. There being no evidence on the record to show when and by what member of the family certain property in the possession of a particular branch of the family was acquired, and the entry in the survey records with respect to it being different from that of the ancestral fields, that is, the entry being in the name of the representative of that particular branch with no sub-division of shares, and the party seeking partition of such property having failed to give evidence to rebut the presumption arising from the sole enjoyment of the particular branch and the entry in the survey records. Held that such property was the separate acquisition of that particular branch. Moro v. purvance of the award, part of the moveable property was divided. Subsequently one of the members of the family died. The plaintiff, another member of the family, now sued to enforce the award and obtained a decree. Held on appeal that the partition should be considered to have taken effect not from the date of the decree, but from the date of the award which followed, as it was by an actual division of some of the moveable property, effected a division at that time, and consequently that the share allotted to the deceased member of the family passed to his heir. SUBBARAYA CHETTI v. Though the widow was recorded under an award by the Collector in the settlement records as owner of an 8-anna share of the estate for her lifetime, that did not operate a separation in title or alter its devolution. S. 87 of the Land Revenue Act, Central Provinces (XVIII of 1881), did not affect the appellant's claim, for the award related solely to the widow's interest. REWA PRASAD SIKAL v. 41. — Possession of one member of joint family at a time—What constitutes partition—Evidence as to impartibility—Compromise—Right of suit—Limitation.—A zamindari granted by the Government in 1803 to a Hindu descended in his family, possession being held by one member at a time. The estate, however, was not impartible. But whether it was, or was not, impartible was adjudged immaterial to the question raised on this appeal. The last zamindar having died without issue in 1888, his widow was in possession when this suit was brought by a male collateral descended from a great-grandfather common to him and to the last zamindar. The plaintiff claimed to establish his right as member of an undivided family holding joint property against the widow, who alleged that her husband has been sole proprietor. In proof of this, she relied on certain arrangements as having constituted partition, viz., that in 1816 two brothers, then heirs, agreed that the elder should hold possession, and that the younger should accept a village, appropriated to him for maintenance, in satisfaction of his claim to inherit; again, that in 1866, the fourth zamindar compromised a suit brought against him by his sister for her inheritance, on payment of a stipend to her, having already, on the claim of his brother, granted to him two villages of the estate; and by the compromise this was made conditional on the sister's claim being settled; again, that in 1871, the fourth zamindar having died pending a suit brought against him to establish the fact of an adoption by him, an arrangement was made for the maintenance of his daughter and two widows who survived him, the previous grant for maintenance of his brother holding good, the adoption being admitted, and the suit compromised. Held that there was nothing in the above which was inconsistent with the zamindari, remaining part of the common family property; and that the course of the inheritance had not been altered. Held also that the claimant was not precluded by the family compromise of 1871, or in any way, from maintaining this suit, and that it was not barred by limitation. VIRAVARA THODERAMAL RAJYA LAKSHMI DEVI v. 43. — Effect of an unexecuted decree for partition—Agreement to divide.—Where there is no indication of an intention to presently appropriate and enjoy in a manner inconsistent with the ordinary state of enjoyment of an undivided family, an agreement to divide without more is not of itself sufficient to effect a partition. Nor is a direction to divide in a decree—which in principle is not distinguishable from a material agreement to divide—more than an inchoate partition insufficient to change the character of the property, which continues a joint estate until there has been an actual partition by metes and bounds, or a division of title so as to give to each member thereof a definite and certain share which he may claim the right to receive and enjoy in severalty. BABAJI PANSURAM v. 60. ——— Impartible estate—Zamindari.—In 1803, G being in possession of the zamindari of M, the permanent settlement was made with him and a sanad was granted to him as prescribed by Regulation XXV of 1802. In 1827 C, the only son of G, being in possession of the zamindari, got into debt, and the zamindari was sold in execution of a decree and bought by Government. In 1835 the zamindari was granted to A, the son of C, by Government and a sanad issued in the usual terms as prescribed by Regulation XXV of 1802. A died in 1864 leaving four sons, the three plaintiffs and C, his eldest son. C died in 1869 leaving an only son J, the defendant. In 1869 the Court of Wards took charge of the estate on behalf of the infant defendant and allowed his uncle, plaintiff No. 1, to receive the rents of the zamindari as renter. J and his three uncles lived in the same house and participated in the joint family property until 1872, when the plaintiffs claimed to have the zamindari divided. By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the Court of Wards all the moveable and immoveable property, except the zamindari talukh, was divided into four shares and distributed in 1874 between the plaintiffs and defendants. In 1884 the plaintiffs sued for partition of the zamindari, alleging that their cause of action arose in 1872, when the Court of Wards denied their right to a partition of the zamindari talukh. The defendant pleaded that the estate was not partible. Held, distinguishing the Hussainpore case (12 Moore's L. A., 1) and the Shivagunga case (1 L. R., 3 Mad., 290) and following the principle laid down in the Nazrid case (1 L. R., 3 Mad., 128) that the zamindari was partible. JAGANNATHA v. RAMABHADRA *pension incomes—Omission of the lower Court to pass a decree for partition among all the co-sharers—Decree for partition among the co-sharers passed in appeal.—*Saranjams are prima facie impartible, the holders being required to make a suitable provision for their younger brothers. Where, however, it appeared that the members of a family had treated saranjams as partible, and had dealt with them as such in effecting partitions of the entire family estate, which consisted both of incomes and saranjams, Held that the Court was justified in concluding that the saranjams were either originally partible or had become so by family usage. The plaintiff, an undivided member of a Hindu family, sued his co-sharers for division of saranjam and other family property. The defendant No. 1 contended that the saranjam was impartible. In any case, he claimed to retain certain sums in his capacity as the eldest representative of the family for the performance of certain offices. Held that, the parties having effected division of the saranjams on previous occasions, the saranjams were either originally partible or had become so by family usage. Held further that, the right of vadiiki (eldership) never having lost its original character of impartibility, it was impartible and transmissible to the eldest representative of the family. Where in a suit for partition a certain sum was claimed by the eldest representative of the family for the purpose of celebrating a certain festival, Held that, the branches of the family being completely separated, each branch would celebrate the festival apart and would necessarily require funds for its separate celebration, and that therefore the sum claimed by the eldest representative for the celebration of the festival could not be left undivided. The Court of first instance having omitted to decree the shares of the defendants other than defendant No. 1, who demanded partition, their shares were declared and allowed in appeal. Ramchandra v. the rest had purchased certain lands now claimed by his widow as his separate property. Held that the proceeds of the sale of the co-parcener's share, so far as they were in excess of the requirements of his creditor's equity, were not divested of the character of co-parcenary property, and the lands purchased therewith were consequently property subject to partition and not separate property as contended by his widow. KRISHNASAMI ATTANGAR v. He, however, before the examination of witnesses, withdrew this condition and expressed his willingness to give defendant credit for half their value. Held that the suit was on these facts not one for partial partition. Per O'FARRELL, J.—That where a suit is brought for division of the whole of the family properties, an omission, whether accidental or fraudulent, to specifically include in the plaint certain of the joint properties, where such properties are ascertained and a decree can be given for partition, will not convert the suit into one for partial partition. VENKATA NAMASIMHA NAIDU v. Assuming a co-sharer's right in the family estate not to have been lost, a deed of gift of a portion thereof to another co-sharer is a violation of his right not justified by the circumstance that the first co-sharer had wrongfully appropriated some of the joint property in which the others might have recovered their rights by an action-at-law. 79. ———— Property left undivided at the time of partition—Suit to recover share of the produce—Amendment of plaint—Variance between pleading and proof.—The circumstances that there has been a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family does not, in the absence of any special agreement between them, alter their rights as to the property still undivided. As to this, they continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family. A claim to a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition does not lie, because such a claim is based on the right to a particular share in the property itself which has no existence in the case of an undivided family. A suit for a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition cannot be amended by making it a suit for partition without entirely changing its character. GABRI-SHANKAR PARABHURAM v. 81. ———— Suit for partial partition—Family property available for partition at the time—Property mortgaged with possession to third party not included—Maintainability of suit.—One of two undivided brothers composing a Hindu family sold the whole of a house, which was in fact joint family property, alleging family necessity in justification of the sale. The other brother subsequently sold his undivided half share to two persons who now sued as plaintiffs for partition and possession of one-half of the house. The family owned another house which had, however, for some time been mortgaged with possession to a third party and was not available for partition at the time. On the plea being raised that the suit was one for partial partition and could not be sustained, Held that the suit was maintainable. Inasmuch as the other house was mortgaged with possession to a third party and therefore no longer available for immediate partition, the suit was one for partition of the whole of the

A partition of joint property is valid as between the members of a Hindu family, although it has not been sanctioned by the Board of Revenue, it being shown that for several years after the partition the members of the family had separately enjoyed the shares which fell to them by the partition. *HOOLOS KOONWAR v. 83. ———— Partition of share of estate—Widow—Possession of estate for maintenance.—The proprietary right to a share in an undivided estate which includes and carries with it a right to claim and enforce a partition of that share must be a right of an absolute and unlimited nature, and does not belong to a Hindu widow who has been placed in possession of her deceased husband's share for her maintenance; consequently, where the widow is not an absolute proprietor, but simply an assignee of the profits for a maintenance, she cannot claim partition of the share so assigned. *BHOOP SINGH v. 84. ———— Partition by father and sons—Partition among joint owners—Divisibility of portion remaining undivided.—The doctrine that when, after a partition of a joint family estate, a portion of the estate remains undivided, the portion which remains undivided cannot afterwards be partitioned, refers to a partition made by a father amongst his sons and their co-heirs. It does not refer to the case where a partition has been made by the joint owners amongst themselves. SHAMASOONDERY DASSEE v. KARTICK CHURN MITTRA

88. ———— Inheritance of talukhdari estate in Oude—Sanad recognizing primogeniture. Effect of, as to existing rights of inheritance—Shares held by members of family—Mesne profits on specific and definite shares.—The ordinary rule is that, if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate, they may have partition. Although in a suit for the partition of joint family estate, where the head of the joint family does not account for the profits under the ordinary Hindu law, mesne profits are not recoverable, it is not so where the family has been living under a clear agreement that the members are entitled not as an ordinary Hindu family, but in specific and definite shares. If the enjoyment of those shares is in any way disturbed, the right to sue for profits will arise, as well as the right to partition. A talukhdari estate which, before and after annexation, was subject to the common Hindu law of Oude, viz., the Mitakshara, was restored after the general confiscation of 1858 to the family, which received a sanad recognizing the shares of its members. At the same time, a grant was made to the head of the family as talukhdar of two other villages, and to him afterwards in 1861 was issued a primogeniture sanad of the above talukhdari estate. This sanad could not prevail against the family rights of inheritance; and effect was given to family arrangements, with the same results as regards the two villages. On the contention that the family, by the effect of the sanads, was to have one head and sole manager in the talukhdar, who being accountable to the junior members for their shares of the profits was alone to hold the entire estate by primogeniture, — Held that this kind of managership was entirely unknown to the common Hindu law of Oude; and that apparently the Oude Estate Act, 1869, did not contemplate any such thing. At all events, there must be clear arrangements, such as were not found here, to establish and prove its existence. Partition was accordingly decreed to the members of the family suing for it. Pirthi Pal Sing v. Jawahir Singh, I. L. R., 14 I. A., 87. I. L. 96. ———— Suit by minors for partition—In what cases there is a right of suit—Malversation.—Under the Hindu laws, a minor co-parcener cannot sue for partition unless his interests are (1) likely to be advanced thereby, or (2) protected from danger. When an adult co-parcener has taken up a hostile position to the interests of minor co-parceners and denied their rights, or sets up his own independent title, or where the minors live separately and the adult co-parcener does not support them, in all these cases it is in the interest of the minors that their share shall be partitioned and set apart. The plaintiffs, who were minors, sued by their next friend for a partition of their ancestral property in the possession of their step-brother, the defendant. It appeared that soon after their father's death disputes and differences arose between plaintiffs' mother and their step-brother, which led to their separation in food and residence. The defendant managed the family property, but did not support the minors out of the rents and profits thereof. Hence the suit. Held that, though no malversation was alleged or proved, the allegations in the plaint of disputes and separate residence and defendant's failure to support the plaintiffs were sufficient to justify the Court in permitting the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. MAHADEV BALVANT v. The eldest mortgaged half of certain family lands to P and the other half to the father (since deceased) of the contending defendants, and placed the mortgages respectively in possession. Neither mortgage was binding on the younger brother who mortgaged his share of the same land to the plaintiff. The plaintiff obtained a decree on his mortgage and attached and brought to sale in execution and himself purchased the half share of his mortgagor, and, having afterwards purchased the share of the elder brother and come to a settlement with P, brought a suit for a moiety of the land in the possession of the contending defendants as forming part of the half share of his mortgagor. Held that the contest being between strangers to the family, and the plaintiff having purchased the entire rights of the family in the land in question, the suit was maintainable without a claim for partition of the whole property of the family. SUBBARAZU v. Also that, subject to the same condition, she may demand a partition of the property. KANNI AMMAL v. AMMAKANNU AMMAL of his father before the son's birth—Property acquired by litigation—Self-acquired property devised by a father to his son is taken by the son under the will and is self-acquired in his hands—Earnings of father as mill manager—Property left by testator to be held moveable or immovable according to its condition at testator's death—Kapoli Bania caste, Custom of, as to partition.—Per APPEAL COURT.—There is no distinction between moveable and immovable property as regards the right of a son in an undivided family governed by the Mitakshara law to partition in the lifetime of the father. Per SCOTT, J.—Where the law of the Mayukha applies, a son is entitled to demand partition of moveable as well as immovable property in his father's lifetime. Defendant's great-grandfather (M) died in 1792, leaving a will, dated 1789, whereby he directed his property to be equally divided among his five sons, of whom R (the grandfather of defendant) was one. The property became the subject of litigation, and was not divided until 1852, long after the death of R, which took place in 1808. R's share was received in 1852 by the executors of his son, N (defendant's father), who had died in 1848. Held that this property came to the defendant by inheritance and was ancestral property, and was not capable of being given or willed away by him. Further that, as having regard to M's will there was no apparent intention on the part of the testator to convert into money such of his property as consisted of lands and houses, the general rule of law applied, viz., that the property must be held to be real or personal according to the actual condition in which it existed at the testator's death. Held also that the defendant's son had a right to claim partition of this property, although the defendant had no son born to him at the time (1852) he came into possession of it. All property acquired out of the income of ancestral property is itself ancestral, whether acquired before or after the birth of a son. In order to entitle a coparcener to hold, as property self-acquired by him, property which has been recovered by his exertions (e.g., by litigation), such property must have been recovered from usurpers holding it adversely to the family; the coparceners must have abandoned their rights; and where such abandonment is a matter of inference, the coparceners, to whom it has been imputed, must have been in a position to sue. A son to whom his father leaves the self-acquired property by will takes the property under the will, and not by inheritance, and as property received by will is held by Hindu law to be received by gift, such property is self-acquired in the hands of the son, and is not subject to partition. The first defendant was sued by his son for partition. Some of the property in the defendant's hands consisted of his earnings as manager of a mill and of the investments of such earnings. The mill had been established in 1860, and the defendant bought thirty-nine shares out of the ancestral funds in his hands. He was appointed chairman of the company, and managed the mill for ten years without any remuneration. His management was very successful, and good dividends were declared every year from 1863. In 1870 he declined to work any longer without remuneration, and at a meeting of the shareholders he was appointed managing director and was granted a commission on all sales effected by the company. Held that the commission so received by the defendant was his self-acquired property. Under the circumstances, it might safely be inferred that he did not obtain the appointment of manager by the direct influence of the shares which he held in the company. The gratuitous services which he had for years rendered to the shareholders had influenced them in giving him the appointment, and such influence could not be said to have been created by the direct instrumentality of the ancestral property. In a suit for partition brought by a son against his father,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to partition of the ancestral property as it subsisted at the date of suit. A custom alleged to exist among the Kapoli Bania caste, according to which a son is not entitled to the partition of ancestral property in his father's lifetime and against his father's will, held not proved. JAGMOHANDAS MANGALDAS v. 113. ——— Right of sons to partition—Indebtedness of father—Minor sons.—Under Mitakshara law, minor sons have rights in ancestral property, for a declaration of which by partition their mother can proceed against their father and his creditors. Partition in such a case might be ordered against the will of the father, without actually taking the property out of his hands. Even where sons, because of their minority, are incapable of signifying their intention of enforcing partition, it is open to a Court to discover whether there are special circumstances which would make a partition desirable. LEKHRAJ KOUR v. 116. ——— Son born after partition—Right of such son to partition—Share of such son—Family arrangement—Limitation.—In the year 1875 one V, having at that time three sons, viz., defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3, divided his property, allotting one-third to the first defendant and retaining the remaining two-thirds in his own possession in the interest of his other two sons (defendants Nos. 2 and 3), who were then minors. The latter continued to live with him, and he managed the property. The first defendant was the son of V's elder wife, and the second and third defendants were the sons of his younger wife. In 1880 the plaintiff was born, and in 1894 he brought this suit by his mother (the younger wife) as next friend for a partition of the whole of V's property, including that which in 1875 had been allotted to the first defendant. The plaintiff claimed a fourth share. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any part of the property which had been given to the first defendant in 1875. The family arrangement then made had been acquiesced in for more than twelve years, and could not be disturbed. The plaintiff could only claim against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who lived with their father in union and with whom the plaintiff himself had lived as member of a joint family. GANPAT VENKATESH DESHPANDE v. 120. ———— Discretion of Court—Widow with daughters and grandsons.—The question whether a Hindu widow is entitled to partition is one for the discretion of the Court in each particular case. In this case, where the plaintiff had daughters and grandsons, and the share she was entitled to through her husband was considerable, she was held entitled to a decree for partition. SUDAMINNEY DOSSETT v. 121. ———— Settlement by co-parcener on wife—Purchaser for value.—In pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement made in consideration of marriage with the father of A, his intended wife, A N, an undivided member of a Hindu family, executed a post-nuptial settlement in favour of A, whereby he declared that during his lifetime his share in the joint family property should be enjoyed by husband and wife jointly, and after his death his share should belong to A. On the death of A N, A sued his co-parcener to recover by partition the share of A N in the joint family property. Held that A was entitled to recover. ALAMELU v. RANGASAMI

[1 L. R., 7 Mad., 588]

122. ———— Right of widows to partition, or to separate enjoyment of joint property.—A claim by one of several widows to an absolute partition of the joint estate, giving to each a share in severalty, is not maintainable. A case may be made out entitling one of several widows to the relief of separate possession of a portion of the inheritance. Such relief ought to be granted when from the nature or situation of the property and the conduct of co-widows or co-widow, it appears to be the only proper and effectual mode of securing the enjoyment of her distinct right to an equal share of the benefits of the estate. Upon the death of the late Raja of Tanjore, the Government of Madras, in the exercise of their sovereign power, took possession of the estate and private property of the Raja. Subsequently, the Government made over to the widows and daughter of the Raja the landed and personal property, having previously obtained the opinion of the Hindu law officers of the Sudder Court on a question put with the view of ascertaining the Hindu law as applicable to the case. The order of Government contained the following direction: "The estate will therefore be made over to the senior widow, who will have the management and control of the property, and it will be her duty to provide in a suitable manner for the participative enjoyment of the estate in question by the other widows, her co-heirs. On the death of the last surviving widow, the daughter of the late Raja, or failing her the next heirs of the late Raja, if any, will inherit the property." In a suit by two of the widows against the senior widow and the 14th defendant, the alleged adopted son of the late Raja, for a division of the moveable property which had been made over to the senior widow by the Government of Madras, and for the cancellation of the adoption of the 14th defendant, — Held that the claim of the 14th defendant by right of adoption being as lineal heir to the Raja in preference to the widows would not be maintainable, assuming the adoption to have been valid. To that claim the absolute ownership of the Government in the interval from the death of the Raja until the act of State by which the transfer was made to the widows and daughters is fatal. JIJYIAMBAYI SAIBA v. 123. ———— Co-widows—Widows inheriting jointly—Order for separate possession and enjoyment.—Widows who take a joint interest in the inheritance of their husband have no right to enforce an absolute partition of the estate between themselves. But where from the conduct of one or more of their number, separate possession of a portion of the inheritance is the only likely means to secure for each peaceful enjoyment of an equal share of the benefits of the estate, an order for separate possession and enjoyment may be made. Jijoyimba Baiy Saiba v. 124. ———— Co-widows—Arrangement for separate enjoyment.—Although the two widows of one and the same husband may arrange for the enjoyment of the estate in separate portions, there can be no compulsory partition converting the joint estate into an estate in severalty. The interest of one of two such co-widows cannot be sold. KATHAPERUMAL v. VENKARAI

[1 L. R., 2 Mad., 194]

125. ———— Co-heiresses—Suit to enforce partition.—Two widows, co-heiresses, in joint possession of property by the Hindu law are in the nature of co-parceners, and one of them can enforce partition against the other notwithstanding the limited character of their tenure, and although such partition is not binding on the reversioners. PADMAMANI DAS v. 126. ———— Co-widows of estate left by their deceased husband.—Possession of the estate left by their deceased husband was taken by two widows of a deceased Hindu, who, being childless, had before his death adopted a son, to whom also by will he bequeathed his estate. The adopted son died soon after the testator. Held that the widows had a possessory title or interest in the estate, notwithstanding that a preferable title might exist in others through the deceased legatee;

also that the estate, being jointly held by them, was partible, and either widow might maintain a suit for partition. SUNDAR v. PARBATHI

127. ————— Division by co-widows of their late husband's estate—Alienation by one after the division—Validity of alienation as against surviving widow on decease of alienor.—A Hindu died leaving two widows, who divided his property by a formal registered partition deed, under which each took possession of her share, with powers of alienation over the property comprised in it. Certain alienations were made by one widow, who subsequently died. On the surviving widow claiming the whole of her late husband's property, including the portions so alienated,—Held that there is no legal obstacle to prevent one of two co-widows from so far releasing her right of survivorship as to preclude her from recovering from an alienee, after the other co-widow's death, property given by way of partition to the latter and alienated by her. A widow may alienate for her life any estate which comes to her by virtue of her widowhood, and may therefore enter into such a deed as will preclude her from recovering during her life property which she has alienated, to the full extent of such alienation, provided that it does not extend beyond her life-interest. *RAMAKKAL v. 129. ————— Mode of division—Survivorship until partition—Rule for partition.—In joint families governed by the Mitakshara law, the principle of survivorship is in force until partition, and upon partition distribution amongst the different members of the family should be made, not according to the ordinary Hindu rule of heirship, but per stirpes. *RAJNARAIN SINGH v. 130. ————— Method of ascertaining shares when some of the family remain united after a partial partition.—A Hindu died leaving two sons, A and B. A had one son, C, and B had three sons, D, E, F. C had three sons, D one, E two, and F one. In 1867 two of C's sons, the two sons of E, and the son of F brought a suit to obtain their shares of the family property. For the purpose of that suit the property was divided into twelve shares. Of the six shares due to A's branch, three were allotted to the two sons of C. Of the six shares due to B's branch, two were allotted to the sons of E and two to the son of F. The remaining five shares were enjoyed in common by the rest of the family, C, his third son, and the son of D, who remained in union. In 1872 C died. In 1879 the third son of C sued the son of D to recover his share of the family property, claiming three-fifths of the whole. The Subordinate Judge awarded him a moiety on the ground that the present state of the family alone was to be considered in ascertaining the shares. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the amount claimed by him. The rule that as between different branches division should be per stirpes, and as between sons of the same father per capita, applies to cases in which all the co-parceners desire partition at the same time, and not to cases of partial partition. Where a joint family in an advanced state of development is broken up by partition, regard must be had to the successive vested interests of each branch, and in order to secure equality of shares division per stirpes at each stage when a new branch intervenes is necessary. *MANJANATHA v. Among other parties to the suit were B, the grand-daughter by the eldest son of A, and C, her second son. C died in 1880, leaving a widow, D, and four infant sons. A, who was not a party to the partition suit, now sued B and D and the infant sons of C for a declaration that she as such widow and mother was entitled to a share in the partitioned properties equal to those of her grand-daughter, B, and her grandsons, the infant sons of C. Held that such a suit would lie, it not being a suit for partition exclusively among grandsons, and that A was entitled to an equal share with her grand-daughter and grandsons in the properties which under the partition decree had been allotted to the representatives of her husband, and to a life-interest in the

At the time of the transfer both the transferor and the transferee had notice of the said suit. On a question having been raised as to what share of the property the transferee was entitled to,—Held that, inasmuch as the suit for partition was instituted by one of the sons, the mother had an inchoate or quasi-contingent right, which ripened into an absolute right on a partition having taken place (which happened in this case), and therefore, she having been entitled to a share, the transferee could not get more than what the transferor was entitled to at the time of the transfer, i.e., one-sevenths share of the property. JOGENDRA CHUNDER GHOSH v. HINDU LAW—PARTITION—continued.5. SHARES ON PARTITION—concluded.*(1) WIFE.

162. — Share of wife—Mitakshara law—Distribution by mortgages and sales in execution.—By ss. 1 and 2 of s. 7 of Ch. I of the Mitakshara, when a distribution of ancestral property is made during the lifetime of a father of a family subject to Mitakshara law, his wife is entitled to an equal share with her husband and her sons. Held in this case that the mortgages by A and the sales in execution which occurred during his lifetime must, as against the defendants, be taken to be a distribution within the meaning of those verses; and as possession was taken by the defendants during A's lifetime, it must be considered a distribution made within that period, and therefore the widow was entitled to an equal share with her two sons. PURSED NARAIN SINGH v. 164. — Right to an account—Suit for partition referred to arbitration, but property not wholly partitioned—Infant's right to an account of his share of the property partitioned and unpartitioned.—A, a member of a Hindu joint family, died leaving a widow and no issue. By his will he appointed B, C, and D, members of the joint family, his executors, and gave his widow power to adopt. In pursuance of that power, the widow adopted E. The executors instituted a suit for partition of the joint estates, and the suit was referred to the arbitration of Z. He died without having partitioned the whole of the property, and an application was then made to the Court to determine the partition. The Court granted the application, and the suit came on for trial. The infant E asked for an account to be taken of the dealings of the joint property, and of the rents and profits on behalf of the estate of his late father, from the death of his father up to the appointment of a receiver. Held that in respect of the properties remaining unpartitioned the infant was entitled to an account of the dealings of the joint property and of the rents and profits from the death of his father up to the time a receiver was appointed, but as to the properties already partitioned, he was not so entitled. SARAT CHUNDER SINGH v. HINDU LAW—PARTITION—continued.6. RIGHT TO ACCOUNT ON PARTITION.

165. — Right to account of past transactions—Share in outstanding debts—Interest.—A plaintiff entitled on partition to half the property in the hands of his brother is bound to bring into hotchpot any ancestral property, or property acquired from ancestral funds which may be in his own hands, but is not liable to account for money received by him from his father while living in commensality with him and his brother, the circumstances of such receipt not being of a kind to impute fraud. Members of an undivided Hindu family making partition are entitled, as a rule, not to an account of past transactions, but to a division of the family property actually existing at the date of partition. In a partition suit, the Court ought not to order an immediate money payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of his share in the outstanding debts due to the family estate, as if such outstanding debts had been recovered and the money were in the hands of the defendant. As a member of an undivided Hindu family is not bound to effect a partition by paying a certain sum of money to his co-partners, the Court in a partition suit ought not to award interest on money decreed to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. LAKSHMAN DADA NAIK v. 166. — Account in partition suit.—Held that, in the case of joint enjoyment by the members of the whole family, or enjoyment by different members, of different portions of the family property, the Court will not, except under special circumstances, order an account to be taken of past transactions, but will make division of the property actually existing at the date of partition. Lakshman Dada Naik v. 167. — Account of means profits—Infant ejected and excluded from enjoyment of family property.—The rule which limits the right of members of a Hindu family seeking partition to a division of the family property existing at the date of division does not apply to the case of an infant who has been ejected by the manager from the family house and excluded from enjoyment of the family property. In such a case the manager is bound to account to the infant for means profits from the date of his exclusion. KRISHNA v. SUBBANNA

168. — Liability of manager to account on occasion of partition—Right of members who were minors at time of management to an account from manager—Manager also guardian of minors—Nature of account to be rendered by a manager on partition—Family idol and property appertaining thereto—Right of mother to a share of estate on partition.—A manager of a Hindu family cannot refuse to render any account whatever of his management on the occasion of a partition, or require the other members of the family to accept his ipsi dixit as to the property subject to partition. What that account should be so as to discharge him from his liability to account as manager, and what objections the other members of the family can take to it, must depend on the conduct of the manager and the other members of the family, the nature of the property and the circumstances of the family, and cannot be stated in definite terms. Members who were minors during the management cannot be taken to have consented to the management, and are entitled, when they attain their majority, to hold the manager liable not only for acts amounting to fraud, but also where the management, has been grossly negligent and prejudicial to their interests; the presumption, however, being that in the absence of evidence, the property for partition is such as it exists at the time of the suit for partition. A brother sued his three brothers for partition of their father's estate, which consisted of moveables and immoveables and a banking business. As senior member of the family, he also claimed the rajaeva (family idol) and the property appertaining to it. The mother (K) of the first three defendants, and M, the widow of a deceased brother of the plaintiff, and N, his aunt, the widow of his father's brother, were also defendants to the suit. The three brothers (defendant Nos. 1, 2, and 3) alleged that their father had died in 1864, at which time they were minors; that the plaintiff had managed the estate ever since, and had in 1865 obtained a certificate of guardianship and administration to their estate under Act XX of 1864; that the plaintiff's management had been fraudulent, improper and wasteful and prejudicial to their interests as minors, and they contended that they were entitled to an account from him of the property at the date of their father's death and of the proceeds, income, and profits from that date to the date of suit. They contended that, as the plaintiff had been appointed administrator of their estate under Act XX of 1864, he was liable to account to them as a trustee, and was bound to show that all sales, purchases, and other transactions entered into by him were necessary and for their benefit. The lower Court held that the family being united, the Minors Act did not apply, and that the fact that the plaintiff had obtained a certificate of guardianship did not enlarge his liability to account, and that on the authorities the manager of a Hindu family was not bound to account for past transactions, nor for mere profits, unless in cases of fraud or gross extravagance, and that the state of the family property as it existed at the time of partition was to be the basis of the distribution. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the defendants were entitled to an account from the plaintiff, and that it was open to them to raise objections with regard to the plaintiff's management. Held also, as to the nature of the account which the plaintiff should render of past transactions, that, having regard to the circumstances of the family and the nature of the family property, the plaintiff, in producing the books of the firm since the father's death which contained an account of all transactions relating to the firm's property and of the moveable and immoveable property, had done all that he could be expected to do, whether as the family manager or as certificated administrator of the defendants' interests in the family property. Held also that the circumstance that the plaintiff had obtained a certificate of administration of the estate of the minors and sold their interests in certain houses, without the consent of the Court, could not give them a counter-claim against the plaintiff, unless they proved that they had been prejudiced by the sale. As to ornaments purchased since the death of the father, it was directed that they should be brought into hotchpot by all the parties in making the partition. As to remissions of tenants' rent and compromises of suits, although a considerable loss was shown to have resulted from them, it was held that the defendants had failed to show that they were improper or uncalled for, and there was no evidence to make the plaintiff himself liable for them, or to forbid their being transferred to the general account. The losses in trade also were properly debited to the general business of the firm, and the plaintiff was not personally liable for them. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to take the rajaeva (family idol) and keep it with the property appertaining thereto as the family idol and the property thereof with liberty to such members of the family as are or shall become marjadas to have access to it for the purpose of worship. Held also that K, the mother of the first three defendants (step-mother of the plaintiff), was entitled on this partition to a one-fifth share in the estate. DAMODARDAS MANBEKAL v. incurred by the father before partition—Decree against father and execution proceedings against son's property in father's lifetime.—In 1890 a person subject to the Hindu law incurred a debt for purposes that were neither illegal nor immoral. In 1891 he divided the family property with his son, and a house fell to the son's share under the division. In 1893 the creditors sued the father in respect of the debt, and, having obtained a decree, sought in the father's lifetime to make the son's house liable in execution thereof. Held that property taken by a son in partition cannot be seized in execution in respect of an unsecured personal debt of his father, even though the debt has been incurred before the partition, provided that the partition is not shown to have been made with a view to defraud or delay creditors. KRISHNASAMI KONAN v. 8. AGREEMENTS NOT TO PARTITION AND RESTRAINT ON PARTITION.

172. ——— Condition against partition.—Effect of prohibition.—Where a neuputro, executed by the father of a joint Hindu family many years before his death, declared that his four sons were not to divide the property; but that any single member of the family, desiring to make any particular arrangement, would be bound by the wishes of the others, and it happened eventually that one of the sons predeceased his father without issue, and another leaving two sons, who were not bound by the prohibition,—Held that, as these grandsons were parties having interest in the property, conditions which do not and cannot affect them ought not to be held to restrain the other co-sharers. Quare—Is such a provision in the deed as that which prohibits partition valid, or is it contrary to Hindu law, ultra vires, and null and void? JEEBUN KRISTO GOSSAMEE v. 174. ——— Binding covenant.—The members of a Hindu family, jointly and severally interested in a certain house and premises, covenanted for themselves, their heirs, and executors, that the said house and premises should never be partitioned, except by the unanimous consent of the contracting parties. Held by the lower Court, and confirmed on appeal, that whether valid or not as regards parties representatives by purchase, the covenant is binding upon those who are personally parties to the deed. RAMDHUN GHOSH v. 176. ——— Dedication to idol—Mortgage.—R D, a Hindu, died possessed of large property, both real and personal, and leaving surviving him two sons, P D and A D, his sole heirs, who after his death came to an amicable partition of some portion of the joint estate, but continued to hold jointly the family dwelling-house and the land thereto attached. On 26th November 1849, P D and A D executed a deed of trust of the joint family dwelling-house, among other properties, by which, after reciting that they had kept certain property joint, and that they had been performing the family ceremonies, etc., and that it was their intention that they should be performed in the same manner at the family dwelling-house, and after setting apart certain real property for the expenses thereof, it was agreed that "we will, during our lifetime, jointly perform the said acts after that manner and according to practice: on the death of one of us, the survivor and the executor or representatives of the deceased person will act after that manner and according to practice for a period of twenty years from the date of the death of him who shall die last; our executors or representatives will jointly perform, out of the proceeds of the aforesaid real property, the puja and so forth at our dwelling-house in Simla in Calcutta, and entertain strangers at the garden which once appertained to R S B. The said real property and our dwelling-house and the baitakhana in station Suikoa, etc., neither we nor our heirs or any of them will have the power to make a partition thereof during the said prescribed period. On the expiration of the said period, should our representatives wish to make a partition of all the said real property, etc., having made a division, they will have the power to perform the acts and ceremonies separately." The said dwelling-house was thereafter held jointly by P D and A D on the trust of the deed of 26th November 1849. P D in December 1849 died, leaving two adopted sons, M D and another, on the death of whom the plaintiff was adopted. P D also left a will, whereby he directed that the purport of the deed of 26th November 1849 should never be violated. A D died 30th January 1856, leaving a will, wherein he appointed the defendants N D, C G, and S G, executors, and thereby he devised all his property, subject to certain legacies, to C G and S G. By his will he charged his executors not to fail to carry out the agreement. The ceremonies continued to be performed as directed in the deed by the plaintiff and the defendants M D, N G, C G, and S G. By deed dated 14th July 1863, N D, C G, and S G, mortgaged, for valuable consideration, to the defendant A B M, certain property, including an undivided share of the said dwelling-house. A B M afterwards instituted a suit on the mortgage against N D, C G, and S G, and by the decree in that suit it was, on 14th April 1870, ordered that the defendants should be absolutely foreclosed of all equity of redemption in the said family dwelling-house and other premises comprised in the mortgage. Subsequent proceedings, taken by A B M against the defendants N D, C G, and S G, resulted in A B M obtaining a writ of possession against them, which he endeavoured, but unsuccessfully, to have executed. The present suit was brought to have the deed of trust of November 26th, 1849, established and to have the trusts thereof declared. In 1854 two suits had been brought in the Supreme Court—one by M D and the present plaintiff, and the other by A D—in which suits decrees were made declaring the will of P D and the agreement of 26th November 1849 to be fully proved and established and binding on A D and his heirs and the representatives of P D. It was found on the evidence in the present suit that the agreement of 26th November 1849 was not fraudulent; that when A D died, the estate belonging to the representatives of P D, independently of the property set apart, was more than sufficient to meet any claims against the estate of P D; that the agreement of 26th November 1849 had, up to the present time, been steadily acted on by the representatives of P D and by the representatives of A D until very recently; that A B M took the mortgage with notice of the agreement and of the fact that it was being acted on under the decrees of the Supreme Court. Held that the family dwelling-house was not absolutely dedicated by the deed of 26th November 1849 to the worship of the deities and performance of the ceremonies mentioned therein, and therefore was not inalienable. But the prohibition in the deed of 26th November 1849 against partition of the family dwelling-house for twenty years after the death of the survivor of P D and A D implied also that there should be no alienation of it for twenty years. Until the end of the twenty years A B M was not entitled to possession in any shape. ANATH NATH DIX v. MACKINTOSH 3 B. L. R., 60

—Deed by joint owners of the family property appointing trustees for the management of the property, Effect of—Effect of deed by joint owners embodying an agreement not to partition the property.—By an instrument, purporting to be a deed of trust, all the existing joint owners of the family property deputed the management of the property to trustees for the purposes of the family solely, giving the trustees certain specific directions with regard to the management of the property and the application of the funds. The beneficial rights of the owners was in no way aliened or altered by the deed. By a clause in the deed the joint owners bound themselves not to ask for partition of the property. Held (by FRANK, J., 1875) that an arrangement of this kind can only be operative just so long as all the joint-owners consent to its being operative and no longer. That it is not competent for owners of property in this country by any arrangement, made in their own discretion, to alter the ordinary incidents of the property which they possess; a joint property therefore cannot be made impartible in perpetuity by any such arrangement, though the owners may, for sufficient consideration, bind themselves to forego their rights for a specified time and definite purpose by a contract which could be enforced against them personally. RADHANATH MUKHERJEE v. TARBUCKPATR MUKHERJEE 3 C. W. N., 126

178. ——— Agreement restraining partition—Right of purchaser of share—Trust for idol.—By an agreement entered into between five brothers, who formed a joint Hindu family, it was provided that none of the parties, "nor their representatives, nor any person, should be able to divide the real and personal property belonging to the family into shares; that, while the male descendants of any of the brothers lived, the sons of the daughter of the deceased persons should not be entitled to the real and personal properties, nor to the proceeds thereof; that none of the brothers, nor any of their male descendants, should be able to adopt a son; that during the lifetime of the brothers, or of the one of them who should be the last survivor, their earnings should be regarded as joint property, and that, if any brother or son of a brother separated himself from the family, he should only get Rs. 20,000 as his share." The agreement further provided for the maintenance of widows and infant children, and that the sum of two lakhs of rupees should be taken from the joint khatta for the purpose of carrying on certain business. The family dwelling-house had belonged to the mother of the brothers. She made a gift by deed of the house and lands and houses appertaining thereto to an idol, and appointed her sons managers, and directed that they should live in the house, and should not have power to partition or alienate any portion of the properties settled. The deed contained provisions as to the disposition of the profits arising from the lands and houses, viz., to provide accommodation for the families of the managers, and to invest the surplus in the purchase of lands in the name of the idol. A son of one of the brothers sold his share in the family property. In a suit by the purchaser for partition and an account of the property, — Held that the general scheme of the arrangement between the brothers was such as could only be binding upon the actual parties to it, not upon a purchaser from one of the parties, and a fortiori not upon a purchaser from the heir of one of the parties. Anand Chandra Ghose v. Frankisto Dutt, 3 B. L. R., O. C., 14, followed. The object of the arrangement was to settle the family property upon trust for the maintenance of the members of the family born and to be born. This could not be done by a gift, and what cannot be done by a gift cannot be done by the intervention of a trust. The owner of property cannot by mere contract during his life prevent his heirs from partitioning property after his death, and such a prohibition is not binding upon an assignee of the heir. Anath Nath Day v. Mackintosh, 8 B. L. R., 60, distinguished. Held also that there was a good gift of the family dwelling-house to the idol, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share therein. RAJENDER DUTT v. SHAM CHAND MITTER. I. L. 179. ——— Clause restraining partition or enjoyment—Otherwise absolute gift of property.—Where a Hindu testator gave all his immoveable property to his sons, but postponed their enjoyment thereof by a clause that they should not make any division for twenty years.—Held that the restriction was void as being a condition repugnant to the gift, and that the sons were entitled to partition at once. *MOKOONDO LALL SHAW v. 180. ——— Land excluded from partition of family property and declared inalienable—Land dedicated to family idol—Subsequent purchase from escheat department of Government—Sale in execution of decree.—By a partition-deed by the six members of a Hindu family it was provided that part of the land of the family should be set apart for the maintenance of the family idol and should be inalienable, and the rest of the land was divided equally. Subsequently the Government claimed the dedicated land as an escheat, and sold it to the members of the family jointly, of whom one built a house on part of it—less than one-sixth with the consent of the others. The house and its site were sold in execution of a decree against the builder. Held that the other members of the family were not entitled to have the house removed or the sale cancelled. *MALLAN v. 7. ——— Inheritance—Missing person—Claim after seven years—Co-owners—Absent co-owner—Claim to his share of property a question of evidence, not of succession.—D, G, and B were co-owners of certain khoti villages. B disappeared, and was unheard of for more than seven years. In his absence, D received his (B's) share of the rents and profits. G claimed to be entitled to a moiety of B's share therein, and brought this suit against D. Held that G was entitled to such moiety. B, having been absent and unheard of for more than seven years, might be presumed to be dead under s. 103 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872); and G, as one of his two survivors, was entitled to a moiety of his property. Where the right of a party claiming to succeed to the property of another is based on the allegation that the latter has not been heard of for more than seven years, the question to be decided is one of evidence, and not a part of the substantive law of inheritance.

8. ——— Evidence Act, ss. 107, 108—Presumption of date of death.—Upon the death of a sonless Hindu, his separate estate devolved upon his two widows, the first of whom had a daughter, who had two sons, G and S G, having a son D. After the death of the first widow, the second came into sole possession of the property and so continued till her death in 1882. At that time S was still living, but G had not been heard of by any of his relatives or friends since 1869 or 1870. In 1884, a purchaser from S claimed possession of the whole estate, and was resisted by D on the ground that the estate had, on the death of the second widow, devolved on his father and S jointly, and S was not competent to alienate it. Held that the question whether the defendant's father was living at the time of the second widow's death in 1882 was a question of evidence governed by ss. 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act; that under the circumstances the defendant's father must be held to have died prior to the time referred to; that consequently, according to the Hindu law, the right of succession to his grandfather's estate did not vest in him jointly with the plaintiff's vendor, so as to enable the defendant to claim through him; that the plaintiff's vendor was therefore competent to alienate the entire estate, and the claim must be allowed. *Mozhar Ali v. 9. ——— Validity of adoption depending on whether natural son alive or dead—Onus of proof—Deed or will conferring estate on a person described as adopted son—Person not heard of for seven years.—Death is to be presumed after a certain interval (seven years); but there is no presumption as to the time of death. If, therefore, any one has to establish the precise period during these seven years at which a person died, he must do so by evidence, and can neither rely, on the one hand, upon the presumption of death, nor, on the other, upon the continuance of life. There is no presumption of law that because a person was alive in 1877, therefore he was alive in 1878. One S died in September 1878, leaving a widow, B. The year before his death his only son (Bala), a child of eight years old, had left his home and was never heard of again. A few days before his death, S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption, which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive, and that he had therefore adopted the plaintiff. The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the death of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead, and, there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died, or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. RANGO BALAJI v. MUDITEPPA

HINDU LAW—RECOVERED PROPERTY.

Decree for possession.—The Hindu law on the subject of "recovered" property applies to cases in which the property has passed from the family to strangers, and has been held by them adversely to the family, and not to cases where the property has been held by one claiming (though unfoundedly) to be a member of the family. Merely obtaining a decree for possession is not "recovering" the property. "Recovery," if not made with the privity of the co-heir, must at least be bona fide, and not in fraud or by anticipation of the intentions of the co-heir. *BISSESSUR CHUCKERBUTTY v. 1. ——— Expectancy—Sale or mortgage of reversionary right in ancestral property—Onus of proof in contracts by reversioners as to their expectant rights—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) s. 6, cl. (a).—The Hindu law which prevails in the N.-W. Provinces recognizes no power in a reversioner to sell or mortgage his interest in expectancy, even although he may be the heir apparent. It is necessary, when money-lenders in this country seek to enforce against the property of a Hindu family a contract of mortgage made by a reversioner, who, although of age at the time, was then still of tender years and without experience of business, for the Court, when the question is raised, to be satisfied that the reversioner understood the nature of the transaction and the effect of the contract which he was entering into, or that the reversioner of the family property, in which the reversioner had an estate in expectancy only, was liable for the debt in respect of which the mortgage is sought to be enforced, and that no unfair advantage was taken of the reversioner's youth and inexperience. *ACHHAN KUAR v. (a) WHO MAY SUE.

2. ——— Suits by reversioners—Suit to set aside alienations by Hindu widow—Suit to restrain Hindu widow from committing waste—Contingent reversionary interest.—Persons having a contingent reversionary interest in lands, expectant on the death of a Hindu widow, though they cannot sue for a declaration of title to the lands as against third persons, may sue as presumptive heirs to set aside alienations of the property made by the widow, upon the ground of there being no legal necessity for such alienations, or to restrain her from committing waste. Unless such suits could be brought, it might be impossible, if the widow lived to a great age, to bring evidence after her death to prove that there was no legal necessity for the alienations. Nor would it be possible to prevent the widow from committing irremediable mischief to the estate. CHOTTOO MISHRA v. JEMAH MISHRA

A Court of equity will not interfere, unless it is shown that there is danger from the mode in which the tenant for life in possession is dealing with the property. The mere fact of the tenant for life keeping in hand for about three months part of the corpus for the alleged purpose of an eligible investment does not amount to waste, nor is in derogation of the rights of those entitled in reversion. *HURRY DOSS DUTT v. The plaintiffs, two or three reversioners entitled to the estate, sued, on the death of the widow, to recover from the purchasers two-thirds of the land sold upon payment of two-thirds of the sum which the widow was justified in raising. It appeared that the nearer reversioners (who were in the first instance joined as defendants in the suit) refused to call in question the validity of the adoption, and that the plaintiff himself had concurred in it at the time when it took place. 11. ————— Suit by reversioner to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow—Right of suit—Remote reversioners—Succession to vatan property—Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act V of 1886), s. 2.—The right to sue to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow is, as a general rule, limited to the nearest reversionary heir, and if he, without sufficient cause, refuses to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act and conduct from so doing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the alleged wrongful act, the next presumable reversioner will be entitled to sue. In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant reversioner claims to sue, the Court must exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether the remote reversioner is entitled to sue, and should require the nearer reversioner to be made a party to the suit. A, a separated Hindu, died possessed of certain property, a portion of which was vatan land, and left him surviving a widow R, a daughter M, and the plaintiffs, who were his brother's sons. Subsequently R adopted V as a son. M, who lived with R and V, did not take any steps to dispute the alleged adoption. The plaintiffs now sued for a declaration that the adoption, if made in fact, was invalid, and that they were entitled to succeed to the property of A on the death of his widow R. Held that, as the plaintiffs were entitled under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 to succeed to the vatan property in preference to M, after the death of R, and were the presumptive reversionary heirs after R, to the vatan property, and the only persons interested in disputing the adoption so far as the vatan property was concerned, the lower Court exercised a proper discretion in allowing the suit to be maintained by the plaintiffs. *Amund Kunwar v. HUREN KISHORE ROY. 1 W. R., 359

16. ————— Suit to set aside adoption—Right to sue.—The mere possibility of succeeding to the estate held by a widow for life does not confer on the person having it the right to sue to contest an adoption alleged to have been made by the widow. Such a suit must be brought either by the presumptive heir, or in the case of his refusal to sue, or precluding himself by act or word from suing, or of his concurring in, or colluding with, the alleged adoption, by the next reversioner. In the latter case, the plaint must state why the presumptive heir does not sue, and the Court will, in the exercise of its discretion, decide whether the plaintiff is competent to sue. GYANENDRO NATH ROY v. 20. ————— Persons not the next reversioners—Right to sue.—Where it appeared there were other persons nearer than plaintiffs, and that there had been no disclaimer of their right on their part,—Held that plaintiffs, who, according to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, were not the next heirs, could not maintain the suit. GOOSHAYEN TEKUMJEE v. PURSOTUM LALLJEE. 3 Agra, 238

21. ————— Suit to set aside adoption—Right of suit.—Although a suit, to contest an adoption made by a Hindu widow of a son to her deceased husband, may be brought by a contingent reversionary heir, yet it is not the law that any one who may have a possibility of succeeding to the estate of inheritance held by the widow for her life is competent to bring such a suit. The right to sue must be limited. As a general rule, the suit must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir, that is to say, by the person who would succeed to the estate if the widow were to die at the time of the suit. But it may be brought by a more distant heir, if those nearer in the line of succession are in collusion with the widow, or have precluded themselves from interfering. The rule laid down in Bhikaji Apaji v. Jagannath Vishal, 10 Bom., A. C., 351, approved. Reference made to Koor Golab Singh v. Rao Kurun Singh, 14 Moore's I. A., 187. If the nearest heir had refused, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he had precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or had colluded with the widow, or had concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumable heir would be, in respect of his interest, competent to sue. In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant heir claimed to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he was or was not competent in that respect to sue; and whether it was requisite or not that any nearer heir should be made a party to the suit. In a suit to have an alleged adoption set aside, the plaintiff, a minor, through his guardian, claimed to sue, on the strength of being the adopted son of the husband of a daughter of a brother of the father of the deceased, under whose authority the adoption was alleged to have been made by the widow, the defendant. The Judicial Committee, without deciding that, as an adopted son, this minor had the same rights as a naturally-born son, and without deciding that he would have been entitled, in default of nearer relations, to succeed to the estate of inheritance, after the death of the widow, pointed out that he could only have succeeded as a distant bandhu, and that he had not a vested, but at most a contingent interest. And held that, there being in fact heirs nearer in the line of succession than this minor, the grounds of his competence to sue in respect of his interest, assuming that interest to exist, should have been made out in the manner above indicated. ABUDD KUNWAN v. Held that, there being no evidence of collusion or contrivance, the plaintiff, not being the next reversioner, was not competent to maintain the suit. The fact that his mother's estate, should it ever come into her possession, would be only a limited estate, would not affect the plaintiff's subsisting position in respect of his right to sue. *MADARI v. 27. ————— Alienation—Fraud.—S was entitled, under the Mitakshara law, to succeed, on the death of M, her mother, to the real estate of N, her father. Certain persons disputed S's right of succession and claimed that they were entitled to succeed to N's estate on M's death, and complained that M was wasting the estate. The difference between such persons and M and N were referred by them to arbitration, and an award was made and filed in Court which, among other things, partitioned the estate between S and such persons. G, who claimed the right to succeed to the estate on S's death, sued for the cancellation of the award on the ground that it was fraudulent and affected his reversionary interests. Held, relying on Dowar v. Boonda, Agra, F. R., 57: Ed. 1874, 43, that the suit was maintainable, notwithstanding that G was not the next reversioner. GAURI DAT v. GUR SARAI

28. ————— Partition between widow and mother, both claiming life-interest—Alienation by mother—Declaratory decree.—Upon the death of a Hindu, a dispute as to his separate estate took place between his mother and his widow, which was referred to arbitration and an award was made dividing the property between the disputants. It did not appear that either of them claimed the property absolutely, but they disputed as to who should have a life-interest in it, and this was the subject of the arbitration and of the award. Subsequently the mother executed a deed of gift of part of the property which came to her in favour of her nephews. The daughter and the daughter's sons of the deceased, as reversioners, sued the donees to set aside the gift, asserting that the donor had no power to make it, having under the Hindu law a life-interest only in the property. Held that, inasmuch as the donor was in any circumstances entitled to maintenance, and the decision came to upon the arbitration was to put her in possession of half the property, but only on the footing of a woman's interest for life, the defendants could not set up any title by adverse possession on her part to defeat the claim of the reversioners. Held also that the plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit as reversioners to the widow, and were entitled to a decree for a declaration that the gift should not affect any of their rights as reversioners after the widow's death. *GOFI CHAND v. legal necessity, and for a declaration that the alienation was void and incapable of affecting his right of succession. A daughter of the deceased was still living and had taken no steps to set aside the sale. Per MAHMOOD, J., that mere delay by a reversioner in instituting a suit to set aside an illegal sale made by a childless Hindu widow cannot be understood to amount to acquiescence in the sale. The acquiescence which would entitle a more remote reversioner to maintain the suit must be such as would amount to an equitable estoppel, precluding the first reversioner from contesting the validity of the sale made by the widow. Dulsep Singh v. Sres Kishoon Pandey, 4 N. W., 83, followed. Also per MAHMOOD, J., that the existence of female heirs, whose right of succession cannot surpass a "widow's estate," does not affect the status of the nearest presumptive reversionary heir to the full ownership of the estate, and that such presumptive heir can maintain a suit for declaratory relief such as was prayed for in the present suit, irrespective of the question of collusion or concurrence by such female heirs in the alienation by a childless Hindu widow or other female heir holding a similar estate. *Chanderkoomar Hazare v. entitled to maintain the suit even though his father, and not he, was the immediate reversioner. RSTOO RAJ PANDY v. LALLJEE PANDY . 24 W. R., 399

83. ———— Right of succession—Nephews.—The right of succession accrues to nephews (sisters' sons) whether born before or after the death of their maternal uncle, not on the death of the maternal uncle, but on the death of his widow; and the nephews can sue to question the validity of alienations made by the widow without legal necessity. GOBIND MOONER DASSER v. 84. ———— Alienation by uncle—Right of nephew.—Held that a nephew is not competent by Hindu law to object to any alienation of ancestral property directly or indirectly made by his uncle. GUNGA DEE BAWUT v. MODHOO SUDUN 8 Agra, 4

85. ———— Right of nephew—Consent of heirs—Daughters-in-law.—A nephew (who would be next of kin entitled to the property) can, with the consent of his father and his uncles, the persons immediately entitled to succeed to the property, maintain a suit for proprietary possession against the daughters-in-law of a deceased Hindu, who have no other right in the property than a right to maintenance. LADDOOLAH v. 87. ———— Alienation by widow—Right of reversioner to sue.—A sale by a widow of property derived from her husband, who is divided in interest from his own family, is valid for her life. Such a sale will not be set aside at the instance of a divided brother of the husband. BHAGAVATAMMA v. PAMPANA GAUD 2 Mad., 396

The assignee of such an interest is entitled to restrain the widow from committing waste. RYCHURN PAUL v. PRABY MONER DASSER Marsh., 622

89. ———— Assignee of reversioner—Suit by assignee—Widow's estate.—During the existence of a Hindu widow's interest in an estate, inasmuch as she has in her the whole estate of inheritance, the assignee of a reversionary heir to her husband has no interest therein as such assignee, which will enable him to bring a suit to have a mortgage and decree affecting the estate set aside. (3) WHEN THEY MAY SUE AND HOW.

40. ———— Suit for possession—Effect on reversioner of adoption by widow.—The right of a reversionary heir to succession, on the death of a widow in possession, is a contingent one. It is only on the death of the widow, when his rights as reversioner are converted into a right to immediate possession, that he is required to sue for possession of the estate. The mere fact of the adoption of another party does not prejudice his rights. Those rights are invaded only when the adopted son, on the death of the widow, takes possession of the property as adopted son. JUGGENDRONATH BANERJEE v. RAJENDRONATH HODDAR

41. ———— Suit for possession of share of estate.—Where the plaintiff was entitled to a share of the estate of the defendant, a widow, in case she should die not having exercised the right to adopt,—Held that a suit for his share on the widow's failure to adopt within a year must be dismissed, the plaintiff having no present right to possession. 42. ———— Suit to set aside alienation of estate by widow.—Where the transfer sought to be set aside was made by the widow in favour of her daughter, who was lawful heir to the property,—Held that the plaintiff, a reversioner, had no present ground of action, as his reversionary right was not prejudiced thereby. UDHUR SINGH v. 43. ———— Suit to set aside alienation of property in possession of widow.—Where property to the immediate possession of which a Hindu widow is entitled is conveyed away by parties having no right to it, the cause of action for a suit to recover possession is afforded thereby to the widow, and not to the reversionary heirs. JAY MOORUTH KOOR v. 45. ———— Suit for compensation money paid to lessee of widow for right of working quarries on land leased to him—Quarries worked for purposes of State Railway—Waste—Right of widow to work quarries.—Land inherited by a widow from her husband was leased by her. The authorities of a State Railway worked quarries on part of it and Government paid Rs. 5,000 as compensation to the lessee. The reversionary heirs sued to establish their right to the money. Held that the money paid by Government, whether regarded as the price of stone bought or compensation for wrong done, should be regarded as part of the produce of the estate, and should not be treated as part of the estate itself or as proceeds of the conversion of part of it into money. The right of a widow to work quarries on land inherited from her husband considered. SURBA REDDI v. CHENGALAMMA

The defendants pleaded that the suit would not lie in the lifetime of the plaintiff's mother. It was found that the alienations were not fraudulent. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to have possession of the property delivered to her, inasmuch as the alienation did not amount to a total destruction of the benefit derivable from the right of succession, and could not therefore be called waste, but that she was entitled only to a declaration that the alienation made by the widow and the subsequent alienations by her alienees should not affect or prejudice the plaintiff or reversioner's interests beyond the lifetime of the widow. MUDDUX MOHUN SHAHA v. ANUNDMOYI

[5 C. L. R., 49]

49. ———— Alienation by widow—Fraud, Proof of.—A Hindu widow being in possession of certain lakhiraj lands in which she had a life-interest, the zamindar brought a suit against a minor reversioner and others to resume the land, obtained an ex-parte decree, and, whether under colour thereof or not, afterwards obtained possession. The widow, who was then dispossessed, brought a separate suit to recover the property, in which the reversioner, who had meantime come of age, was joined as a co-plaintiff. Owing to a petition presented by the widow, this suit was treated as having come to an end. Held that, in the circumstances, and the consequent jeopardy to the title of the reversioners, the reversioner above referred to was competent, without showing fraud on the part of the widow, to bring a suit to have the land reduced to his possession, and to prevent the zamindar from acquiring title by adverse possession. CHUNDER KOOMAR GANGOOLY v. RAJ KISHEN BANERJEE

14 W. R., 322

50. ———— Collusion of widow with parties in adverse possession.—Suit by a Hindu daughter, for herself and as guardian of her minor son, to recover possession of her deceased father's separate estate. The legal representatives of the estate were, first, the deceased's widow, and after her, the plaintiff and her son. The widow not only failed to occupy and manage the estate, but, in collusion with the other defendants claiming under a hostile title, abandoned her rights, alleging that her husband was not separate, but a member of a joint family, and left the hostile holders undisturbed. To preserve the separate estate from becoming extinguished by the operation of the law of limitation, it was necessary to remove the adverse occupants and to place the estate in the possession of some person to be appointed to represent it; and as the widow (the legal representative) never was in possession and did not ask for it, but repudiated all claim to it, it was held that no one had a better right to the possession than the plaintiff, and possession was accordingly decreed to her as manager during the widow's lifetime. GUNESH DUTT v. 4. RELINQUISHMENT BY WIDOW TO REVERSIONERS.

52. ———— Effect of relinquishment by female—Title of reversioner on relinquishment.—The succession of females according to Hindu law is not regular succession and is not based upon the ordinary theory of spiritual benefit. life-estate to him, but it is essential that she should surrender her estate, so that the whole estate should become at once vested. A Hindu widow executed an ikarnama in favour of her daughter's son, then apparently the heir who would ultimately succeed, but adding that she would retain possession for her own life. Held that this could not operate to exclude the daughter, nor after her the son of another (deceased) daughter, not born at the date of its execution. BEHARI LAL v. The other widow, S, came to an arrangement with R under which, on 9th December 1889, two deeds were executed, by the first of which S relinquished to R her life-interest in the properties she inherited as widow of M, and by the other R conveyed to S an absolute right in half the properties so relinquished, retaining the other half himself. R died on 27th November 1890, and his widow P came into possession of the half share of the properties belonging to him. In a suit by the plaintiff, as the next reversionary heir of M for a declaration that the deeds were invalid, and did not affect his reversionary right,—Held that the suit was maintainable in the lifetime of the widow. Iori Dutt Koor v. which was given by S to R, was absolutely alienated in his favour, and the plaintiff was not entitled to question the validity of the alienation, so far as that portion of the properties was concerned. Held further that, though the effect of the decision in Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Harinath Sarma Roy is to make the widow and the presumptive reversioners competent to deal with the estate absolutely for certain purposes, the widow cannot, with the consent of the presumptive reversioner, convert her life-interest in any portion of her husband's estate which she retains for herself into an absolute interest freed from all restraint on alienation. Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 236, referred to. In a suit brought on the basis of the ikarnama to set aside a lease granted by the widow,—Held that there is nothing in any statute law which renders such a provision inoperative; neither ss. 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) nor any principle underlying them is applicable to it: it is not an unreasonable provision; there was no absence of equity in the arrangement, and effect should be given to it. KULDIP SINGH v. 68. ———— Sale by a Hindu widow—Whether the reversioner consented that she should sell the whole inheritance, or only her life-estate.

—The sale by a Hindu widow of a share in village lands of which share her husband had been proprietor, having taking place without justifying necessity, could extend no further than to transfer her interest as a widow, for life, unless the consent of the reversionary heir had been given to her selling the whole inheritance. The appellant's case was that this consent had been given. The evidence of its having been given was the fact that this heir, having been appointed the widow's mukhtar for the purpose, had executed, on her behalf, a sale-deed containing words to the effect that the vendee had become (as the English translation on the record expressed it) "absolute" owner of the share sold. This heir, however, received no consideration to induce him to relinquish the reversionary title; and, on the death of the widow, his descendant claimed the inheritance against the vendee's son, then in possession. Held that it had not been made so clear that the conveyance transferred the whole estate of inheritance as to cause it to follow that the reversionary heir, when shown to have consented to the transfer by the widow, must be taken to have consented to a transfer by her of the whole estate of inheritance. Therefore, the judgment of the Appellate Court below, that the transfer extended only to the widow's life-estate, must be maintained. JIWAN SINGH v. MIANI LAL

1. DESCRIPTION AND DEVOLUTION OF STRIDHAN.

1. ——— Definition of "stridhan"—
Different classes of stridhan—Woman married in Asura form.—The etymological import of the word "stridhan," and the different views with which it is regarded in the Eastern and Western schools of Hindu law, pointed out. The Mitakshara recognizes only one class of stridhan, and includes in that class all property acquired by a woman by inheritance. According to the last-mentioned authority, a woman's stridhan, if she has been married by the Asura form, upon her death childless, goes to her mother, her father, and their kindred,—i.e., to the sapindas of her father in the first instance,—and, failing them, to her mother's next of kin; but if a woman has been married according to one of the approved forms, her stridhan descends, upon her death childless, to her husband and his sapindas. Over stridhan acquired by inheritance (so far as it consists of immoveable property) a woman's power of alienation is limited. The Vyavahara Mayukha also considers property acquired by a woman by inheritance to be stridhan, but classes stridhan under two heads—stridhan in a narrower sense, embracing particular species, for which a peculiar mode of devolution is prescribed, and stridhan generally (including stridhan acquired by inheritance), which descends in the same line as if the woman had been a male,—i.e., to her sons and the rest,—and this notwithstanding her having left daughters. Authorities bearing upon the subject of stridhan considered and commented upon. VIJAYARANGAM v. LAKSHUMAN 8 Bom., O. C., 244

2. ——— Property given to a woman by a stranger—Mayukha—Inheritance—Devolution of such property—Daughter's daughter not entitled to it—Son's widow preferred as gotraja sapinda.—By the law of inheritance laid down in the Mayukha, a house given to a married woman by a stranger to the family and her own earnings devolve on her death as if she had been a male. The daughter-in-law of the deceased owner succeeds, therefore, in preference to the daughters of a deceased daughter. BAI NARMADA v. BHAGWANTRAI

3. ——— Property of daughter bequeathed to her by father before her marriage.—The property of a daughter bequeathed to her by her father before her marriage falls within the category of stridhan. JUDONATH SIRCAR v. BISSUNT COOMAR ROY CHOWDHURY [11 B. L. R., 286; 16 W. R., 105; 19 W. R., 264]

4. ——— Gift by son to mother for maintenance.—A gift of money by a son to his mother for her maintenance comes within the definition of stridhan in the Hindu law. DOORGA KOOCHWAR v. TEJOO KOONWAR 5 W. R., Mis., 59

5. ——— Property purchased or acquired by mother—Property inherited by daughter from mother—Interest of Hindu daughter in mother's property.—A, a Hindu widow, died intestate, leaving her surviving sons of her husband's elder brothers, a sister, and the husband and children of a deceased sister. At the time of her death A was possessed of certain articles of jewellery given to her on her marriage, and of certain other articles of jewellery, and of Government paper standing in her name, which she had purchased herself. She was also possessed of a share of a house and some Government paper, which had been left to her by the will of her mother. The provisions of the will in question being obscure, the parties interested under it had referred their difficulties to arbitration, and by the award the arbitrators allotted to A the share of the house of which she had died possessed "to be held by her in severalty as a Hindu daughter in a manner prescribed by the Hindu law as prevalent in Bengal," and allotted the Government paper to her, "to be taken and enjoyed by her absolutely." In a suit by the sons of A's husband's elder brothers claiming the whole of her property as her stridhan, Held that, as far as the source was concerned, all the gifts under the will might well be A's stridhan, and that, as the award gave her an absolute interest in the Government notes, they were her stridhan and passed to the plaintiffs together with all the jewellery and the Government notes purchased by her; but that, as the award gave her only the interest of a Hindu daughter in the house, and that, as what a daughter inherits from her mother does not become her stridhan, the plaintiffs had no claim to the share of the house. FRANKISEN LAMA v. NOXANMONEY DASKE

[I. L. R., 5 Cal., 222]

6. — Stridhan inherited by daughter from mother—Preferential heirs on death of daughter.—Stridhan inherited by a daughter from her mother passes on the daughter's death to the person who would be the next heir to the mother's stridhan. Where B inherited stridhan from A, her mother, it was held to pass on the death of B to the sons of A in preference to the children of B. HURI DOYAL SINGH SARMAHA v. GRISH CHUNDER MUKHERJEE

[I. L. R., 17 Cal., 911]

7. — Succession of daughter to property of mother—Daughters as heirs to exclusion of sons—Mitakshara law—Mayukha law—Ratanagiri District.—According to the Mitakshara (which, and not the Mayukha, is the paramount authority in the Ratanagiri District), the daughter, as to property inherited from her mother, takes an absolute estate which classed as her stridhan and descends to her own heirs, i.e., to her daughters to the exclusion of her sons. JANKIRAI v. SUNDRA

[I. L. R., 14 Bom., 612]

8. — Shares in villages held by wife of former proprietor—Mitakshara.—A share in a pattidari village given by a Hindu proprietor to his wife may become her stridhan within the contemplation of the Mitakshara, s. 11, cl. 1, enabling her to make a valid gift of it. THAKRO v. GANGA PRASAD

10. — Property acquired by a Hindu widow by adverse possession.—A property acquired by a Hindu widow by adverse possession is her stridhan. MORIM CHUNDER SANYAL v. KASHI KANT SANYAL

[2 C. W. N., 161]

11. — Properties acquired after her husband's death—Reversioner—Burden of proof.—Where after the death of a Hindu widow the plaintiff claimed, as the reversionary heir of her husband, certain properties some of which were inherited from her husband and some acquired by her after her husband's death,—Held that there is no presumption of law that property acquired by a Hindu widow after her husband's death forms part of her husband's estate. The question from what source the purchase-money came is one of fact, and it is for the plaintiff to start his case with proof sufficient to shift the onus, proof at least of facts from which an inference can be drawn. DAKHINA KALI DEBI v. 12. — Husband's estate inherited by widow—Benares law—Power of disposition of widow.—Held that, according to the law of the Benares school, no part of her husband's estate, whether moveable or immovable, to which a Hindu widow succeeds by inheritance, forms part of her stridhan or peculiar property; and the text of Katyayana must be taken to determine, first, that her power of disposition over both is limited to certain purposes; and, secondly, that on her death both pass to the next heir of her husband. BRUGWANDEN DOOREY v. MYNA BAI

[9 W. R., P. C., 23; 11 Moore's I. A., 487]

13. — Immoveable property inherited by mother from son.—According to the Mitakshara and the Vivada Chintamani, all property that a woman inherits does not thereby become stridhan, so as after her death to descend to her heirs. Immoveable property which, in default of other intervening heirs, has been inherited by a mother from her son descends, on the mother's death, not to her heirs, but to the heirs of the son from whom she inherited it. PUNCHAMUND OJHAS v. LALSHAN MISSEK

[8 W. R., 140]

14. — Property inherited by sister from brother—Law in Bombay Presidency.—A sister on this side of India, taking as heir to her brother, takes his property as stridhan with an absolute power of disposition over it; and such property upon her death passes in the first instance to her daughters. The sons of such sister have not a vested interest in it as co-parceners with their mother. Property acquired by a married woman by inheritance with the exception of property inherited by a widow from her husband classed as stridhan, and descends accordingly. BHASKAR TRIMBAK ACHARYA v. MAHADEB RAMJI

[6 Bom., O. C., 1]

15. — Immoveable property inherited by a married woman from her father.—According to the Hindu law of inheritance as received in the Bombay Presidency, immoveable property inherited by a married woman from her father, whether or not it be strictly entitled to the name of stridhan, descends on her death to her own heirs, and not to her father's accendants according to what is called the "melancholy succession." An inheritance descending on a married woman from her father must be classed as stridhan and descends accordingly. NAVALKAM ATMARAM v. NANDEKISHOR SHIVNARAYAN

16. — Gifts by husband to wife from motives of affection—Ornaments for ordinary wear.—Gifts of affection given by a husband to his wife after marriage are stridhan, and it is not necessary to the preservation of their character as stridhan that they should be constantly worn. If given unreservedly, they become the wife's stridhan. If ornaments appear to be ornaments which a wife would ordinarily wear in her station of life, and not those which would be purchased for use only on extraordinary occasions, such as marriages and the like, the presumption is that they are for the ordinary use of the wife and given to her without reservation. They would therefore be regarded as gifts of affection and would constitute stridhan, and would not be liable to attachment and sale for the satisfaction of the husband's debts. RADHA v. BISHESHUR DASS

[8 N. W., 279]

17. ———— Ornaments given to wife at her marriage—Ornaments given after marriage—Sons and daughters.—Where the wife of a Hindu dies, leaving one son and two daughters, such of her ornaments as were given to her at her marriage pass to her daughters, and not to her son. Those given to her after marriage or by her husband or kindred pass, according to the Mayukha, to the son and daughters in equal shares. ASHABAI v. TYEE HAJI RAHMUTTULLA . . . I. L. 18. ———— Gift by father to daughter—Meane profits—Inheritance.—A Hindu, by a deed, dated in 1840, gave his daughter, a childless widow, an estate for life in certain property, with remainder on her death to his brother's grandsons; the daughter was put in possession, was dispossessed in 1858, and died in 1862. Under the terms of the deed, the property then went to the survivor of the two grandsons, who in 1864 sold his rights and interests in the property. In 1865 the purchaser brought a suit and recovered possession from the defendants. His representatives now sued for meane profits of the property from 1860 to 1865. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to meane profits which had accrued due, but were uncollected, in the lifetime of the daughter; that such meane profits would go to her heirs, who would alone be entitled to them. GURU PRASAD ROY v. NAFAR DAS ROY

19. ———— Grant to wife and her heirs male—Devise by widow to sons—Rights of daughter.—A Hindu granted certain land to his wife C and her sons and grandsons for ever. C devised the land to her son by will. Held that the land became the stridhanam of C, that the devise was inoperative under Hindu law, and that the land descended to C's daughter. BRUJANGA RAU v. RAMAYAMMA

[I. L. R., 7 Mad., 387]

20. ———— Stridhanam property—Right of daughter to succeed.—In a suit for land it appeared that it had been given to one S deceased, after her marriage, by her father. The donee died leaving her brother, defendant No. 1, her son (since deceased), the husband of defendant No. 2, and the plaintiff, her daughter. Defendant No. 1 was in joint possession on behalf of defendant No. 2. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the land. MUTHAPUDAYAN v. AMMANI AMMAL I. L. R., 21 Mad., 58

21. ———— Emfranchisement of service inam.—Land which formed the emolument of the office of moniegar was enfranchised in favour of a Hindu woman, who died leaving her surviving defendant No. 2 (her husband), the plaintiff (her unmarried daughter), and two sons and two married daughters who were not parties to this suit. The plaintiff sued to recover the land to which she claimed to be entitled under the Hindu law of inheritance. Held that the property belonged to the deceased as her stridhanam descendible to her heirs, and (without deciding what control, if any, defendant No. 2 had over the property) that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed according to the law of inheritance applicable to such property. *SALEMMA v. 25. ———— Immoveable property acquired from deceased uterine brother—Power of alienation—Husband's heirs.—Immoveable property acquired by a childless Hindu widow from her deceased uterine brother is her stridhan and stridhan with which the heirs to her husband have nothing to do. 30. ——— Devolution of stridhan belonging to a childless widow—Grandson—Co-widow—Husband's nephew—Sapindas.—A childless Hindu widow died, possessed of stridhan consisting of ornaments given to her on her marriage and of a house purchased by her out of her own separate income. She left her surviving (1) a co-widow; (2) the plaintiff, who was grandson of another co-widow; and (3) a nephew (i.e., brother's son) of her husband. She had been married in one of the approved forms. Held that the plaintiff was a nearer sapinda of the deceased than either her co-widow or her husband's nephew, and as such excluded both from inheriting the deceased's stridhan. GOJABAI v. 33. ——— Succession to stridhan property—Sister-in-law.—A childless Hindu widow, who had been predeceased by her parents, died leaving stridhanam property. Her brother's widow claimed to be entitled to inherit that property, and sued to enforce her claim. Held that, whether the marriages of the deceased and her mother respectively had taken place in a superior or an inferior form, the plaintiff was not entitled to inherit the stridhanam property in question. THAYAMMAL v. ANNAMALAI MUDALI. I. L. R., 19 Mad., 35

34. ——— Estate of married daughter in stridhanam property of mother.—Under the Hindu law in force in Southern India, a married daughter, who succeeds to her mother's immovable stridhanam property, takes a life-interest only, and after her death it passes to her mother's heir. VENKATARAMAKRISHNA MAU v. 35. ——— Devolution of stridhan a property—Hindu Law, Marriage—Presumption as to form of marriage.—Under the Hindu law of Benares school, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, a marriage must be presumed to have taken place in one of the approved forms; therefore, the heir of a woman to her stridhan a property is the nearest kinsman of her husband, and not of her father. Thakoor Deyhee v. 36. ——— Woman's estate apart from stridhan—Devolution of, according to Mayukha—Property inherited by a woman from a male owner—Property not of the class called "stridhan proper"—Reversion on her death to heir of last male owner not to be extended to stridhan.—In cases to which the Vyavahara Mayukha is applicable, a woman's daughter, and not her husband, is the heir to her property, although not of the kind belonging to the class of "stridhan proper." The doctrine that property which has been inherited by a woman should revert on her death to the heirs of the last male owner is not to be extended to the devolution of stridhan. The heirs to succeed are the heirs to the woman herself, though her heirs in the husband's family. The phrase "sons and the rest" in Ch. IV, s. 10, placitum 26 of the Mayukha, means merely "sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons," and the phrase "daughters and the rest" in placita 14, 23, and 24 means "daughters and their issue" as contrasted with "sons, grandsons and great-grandsons." As regards property which does not class as woman's property in the technical sense, the "sons and the rest" take precedence over the "daughters and the rest." Failing both sons and daughters, the heirs to "stridhan proper" and "stridhan improper" are identical, save that as between male and female offspring the latter have a preferential right as regards "stridhan proper," while the former have a similar right as to "stridhan improper." The author of the Mayukha, like the author of the Mitakshara, does not regard the enumeration of specific kinds of stridhan in the old Smṛiti texts as exhaustive. He includes under the name all that by law becomes the property of the woman, only (unlike the author of the Mitakshara) he distinguishes the specific kinds enumerated in the texts from those which are not so enumerated for purposes of inheritance. In doing this it seems quite reasonable to lay down that, as regards that class of property which is emphatically woman's property being expressly so named by the old sages, the female offspring should take precedence over the male; while as regards that which is not such, the general preference given to male offspring over female by Hindu law should have effect. On the other hand, there is no obvious reason why in the case of collateral relations any similar distinction should be maintained between the two classes. Under the rule of succession above stated, the woman is recognized as a fresh source of devolution. It is to be remembered that the property with which the rule in question deals, is not merely that which the woman obtains by inheritance, but may include that which has never belonged to her husband or any other relation, either on the husband's or the father's side, but is her own original acquisition. Such property is the woman's property; it is not the husband's property. Why, then, should it go on her death to any one except to those who are the woman's heirs, and how can the rule about the last male owner be made applicable to such property at all?

37. ——— Inheritance by a grand-daughter for a limited estate—Succession by heir of last full owner.—A Sudra (Lingayat) died in 1826 leaving his property to A, B, and C, his daughters, who enjoyed it for some time jointly. In 1860 a settlement was made by (i) A, the sole surviving daughter, (ii) D, who was the daughter of B, and (iii) the present plaintiff, who was the only son of C and also the step-son of D. Under the settlement, two-thirds of the property were given to the present plaintiff, and the rest was divided between A on the one hand and D and E on the other. E was the daughter of D. Subsequently D and E acquired A's share under a deed of gift, dated 5th June 1863. D died in 1883. E had died previously, leaving the present defendant (her husband) and a daughter F, who died an infant without issue in 1891. The plaintiff now sued to recover the property which passed to the line of B. Held (1) that the settlement of 1860 on its true construction gave to D and E a life-interest only in the event of their having no descendants, but an estate of inheritance otherwise, and that that disposition was valid, and accordingly that in the event which happened they took a heritable estate; (2) that under the settlement of 1860 and the deed of gift of 1863, D and E took as joint tenants with benefit of survivorship, and not as tenants-in-common, and accordingly that D became sole full owner of the property on the death of E, whose husband thus acquired no title as her heir; (3) that F inherited the property, but only for a limited estate, and that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed as heir to D, the last full owner. VIRABANGAPPA SMETTI v. 43. ———— Succession to stridhan.—Upon the death of a childless Hindu widow who had been married in one of the four approved forms of marriage, S, one of the collateral relatives of her husband, stating that his minor son had been adopted by her, obtained possession of certain property which had formed her stridhan, and mutation of names was effected in the minor's favour in the revenue records. A suit was instituted against S and his son by C, on the allegation that he and J, who were collateral relatives of the widow's husband, were entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed in moieties to the properties left by her as her stridhan, and claiming recovery of possession of half her property. In defence, the adoption was pleaded, and another plea was that the widow had left a brother who, in the absence of the adoption, would succeed to the property to the exclusion of the plaintiff. The Court of first instance held that the alleged adoption had not been proved. In the lower Appellate Court the plea as to adoption was given up. Held that, upon the facts found, the plaintiff was the heir of the deceased widow, and as such entitled to succeed to her stridhan under the Hindu law. *Thakoor Deyhes v. 47. ———— Devolution of property.—D, the daughter of one L, died childless in 1866 possessed of certain immoveable property which she had inherited from her father L. L's sister N had one son A by her first husband P. P had a second wife B, whose son K was the father of the defendants. After P's death, his widow N married again and had a son who was the father of the plaintiff. The plaintiff in this suit claimed to recover the property of D from the defendants who had taken possession. He contended that the property having devolved on A through a female must continue to descend in that line, and that he was entitled. The defendants claimed as heirs of A. Held that on D's death A was the nearest bandhu relation both of D and her father L, and consequently became full owner of the property. On A's death the defendants, as sons of his half-brother K, became his heirs and were entitled to the property. DALPAT NAROTAM v. BHAGRAM KHUSHAL

HINDU LAW—USURY.

1. ————— Rate of interest—Act XXVIII of 1855.—Act XXVIII of 1855 did not repeal the Hindu laws as to the rate of interest. Such rate is governed by the strict rules of Hindu law, as originally laid down by Manu and other lawgivers. RAM-LAL MOOKERJEE v. HARAN CHANDRA DHUR

6. ————— Interest exceeding principal—Mad. Reg. XXXIV of 1802.—Where part payments were made on a bond, and credited in discharge of the principal, and an action was brought for the balance of the principal and for interest, and the lower Court allowed a sum for interest as due at the date of the plaint which was greater than the principal, the High Court disallowed the excess. The previous decisions of the Sudder Court to the contrary overruled. DHONDU JAGANNATH v. NARAYAN RAM CHANDRA. 1 Bom., 47

8. ————— Interest exceeding principal—Damdupat, Rule of.—The Hindu law rule of damdupat does not operate when the defendant is other than a Hindu. NANCHAND HANRAJ v. BAPUSAHAB RUSTAMBHAI. 1 L. R., 3 Bom., 131

9. ————— Interest—Rule of damdupat when applicable—Mortgage—Hindu creditor claiming interest from a debtor not a Hindu—Redemption, Suit for.—In a redemption suit brought by a Mahomedan against a Hindu, it was found on taking the accounts that a sum of Rs17,519 was due by the plaintiff (mortgagor) to the defendant (mortgagee). Of this sum, Rs6,500 were the principal, and the remainder (Rs11,019) was for interest. The plaintiff contended that the defendant being a Hindu was bound by the rule of damdupat, and could not claim as interest more than the amount of the principal. Held that the rule of damdupat did not apply; and that the plaintiff was liable to the defendant for the whole amount. The rule of damdupat only applies when the debtor is a Hindu. DAWOOD DUVESH v. VULLUBHDAS PURSHOTAM

17. ————— Mortgage with possession—Mortgages to take rent in part payment of interest—Remaining interest to be paid by mortgagor every year.—The damdupat rule applies in all cases as between Hindu debtors and creditors both in respect of simple as also of mortgage debts. (2) It does not, however, apply where the mortgagee has been placed in possession, and is accountable for profits received by him as against the interest due. (3) But where these profits are by the terms of the bond received for only a portion of the interest on the mortgage debt, the general rule of damdupat will govern such mortgage accounts. SUNDARABAI v. beyond the amount of the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time applies as well to mortgage transactions as to other loans. But where the mortgagee enters into possession of the mortgaged property, and in taking the accounts between the mortgagor and mortgagee credit is given to the latter for the rents and profits received by him as against the principal and interest due, the above rule cannot equitably be applied. NATHUBHAI PANACHAND v. MULCHAND HIRACHAND

[5 Bom., A. C., 196]

21. Interest—Rule of damdupat—Mortgage.—A mortgagee is entitled to have interest added to the principal at the rate stipulated in the mortgage-deed, and to appropriate the rents and profits received by him in or towards satisfaction of such interest, but after such appropriation, if the amount of interest due on the mortgage exceeds the amount of principal, then, according to the rule of damdupat, the mortgagee's claim must be limited to double the principal amount. Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand, 5 Bom., A. C., 196, explained. GANESH DHARMIDHAR MAHARAJDEV v. KESHAVRAY GOVIND KULGAVKAR

[I. L. R., 15 Bom., 625]

22. Rule of damdupat—Applicability of the rule—Mortgage the terms of which make an account current necessary.—The operation of the rule of damdupat is excluded in all mortgages, the terms of which necessitate the existence of an account current between mortgagor and mortgagee, whatever the state of the account may be. Ganesh Dharmidhar v. Keshavray Govind, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 625, overruled. GOPAL RAMOHANDRA v. GANGARAM ANAND SHET

[I. L. R., 20 Bom., 721]

23. Damdupat—Mortgage—Liability to account—Decree on mortgage—Further interest from date of suit to decree ordered by the Court—Discretion of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 209.—Where under the terms of a mortgage there is a liability to account, the rule of damdupat does not apply. The law as laid down in Govpal v. Gangaram (I. L. R., 20 Bom., 721) is not limited only to cases in which at date of suit an account between the mortgagor and mortgagee is actually kept. In a suit brought by a mortgagee against his mortgagor (both parties being Hindus) the decree ordered the defendant to pay interest from the date of suit to decree upon the total found due after applying the rule of damdupat at the date of suit. It was objected that this order of further interest violated the rule of damdupat. Held that the discretionary power as to awarding interest conferred on the Courts by s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat. DHOND-SHET v. RAVJI

I. L. R., 22 Bom., 99

24. Interest exceeding principal—Mortgage transaction.—Held, in a case of deposit for redemption of a mortgage, that the principal and an equal sum for interest was sufficient, and that no more interest could accrue during the year of grace, as the law prohibited interest in excess of the principal. SHROBART v. DHABEE THAKOOR

2 Agre, Pt. II, 194

25. Interest exceeding principal—Rule of damdupat—Mortgage transactions.—According to the Hindu law of damdupat, interest exceeding the principal sum lent cannot be recovered at any one time. Cases bearing upon the subject of damdupat, and how far and when that law is applicable to loans upon mortgage, reviewed and considered. NARAYAN v. SATVAJI

9 Bom., 83

26. Interest exceeding principal—Damdupat, Rule of—Mortgage transactions—Suit for foreclosure.—In a suit for foreclosure of an equitable mortgage, Held that the plaintiff could not recover interest to an amount exceeding the principal sum lent; the rule of damdupat being applicable in a case of a mortgage by a Hindu where no account of rents and profits is to be taken. GANPAT PANDURANG v. ADARJI DADABHAI

[I. L. R., 8 Bom., 312]

27. Interest exceeding principal—Rule of damdupat—Limitation.—In a suit by the assignees of the equity of redemption for possession on payment of the mortgage-money, Held the question of the period for which interest was to be allowed was therefore to be determined by Act XV of 1877, the Act in force at the date of the institution of this suit, art. 132 of which applied; but as the rule of damdupat is not affected by Limitation Acts, the defendants could not be allowed as interest more than the amount of the principal on which it was to be paid. HARI MAHAJAI v. PALAMBHAT BAGHUNATH

[I. L. R., 9 Bom., 233]

28. Interest recoverable at any one time, Amount of—Damdupat, Rule—Act XXVIII of 1856—High Court, Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.—The rule of Hindu law, known in Bombay as the rule of damdupat, that no greater arrear of interest can be recovered at any one time than what will amount to the principal sum, is neither a mere moral precept nor limited in its application to other than stipulated interest, and as a part of the Hindu law of contract is, in the absence of any legislative enactment to the contrary, the law as between Hindus in the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. Act XXVIII of 1856 deals exclusively with the rate of interest which may be allowed, and there is nothing in that Act inconsistent with the rule of damdupat. Nathobhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand, 5 Bom., A. C., 196, distinguished. NOBIN CHUNDER BANERJEE v. BOMESH CHUNDER GHOSH

[I. L. R., 14 Calo., 781]

29. Interest—Rule of damdupat—Account directed by decree in mortgage suit between Hindus—Interest for periods before, during, and after, the six months allowed by decree for redemption.—Where a mortgage decree, in a suit between Hindus, directed an account to be taken of what was due to the plaintiff for principal and interest, the latter to be computed at the contract rate for six months, provided for redemption on payment of the amount due within the six months, and directed in case of default of payment that interest due be added to the principal sum, interest thereafter to be computed on the aggregate amount at 6 per cent.—Held that in taking the account the rule of damdupat was rightly applied to the interest accruing on the mortgage debt both previous to and during the six months allowed for redemption, notwithstanding the form of the decree. Nobin Chunder Bannerjee v. Romesh Chunder Ghose, I. L. R., 14 Calc., 781, referred to; and that the same rule was applicable to the interest accruing after the period of six months had elapsed. When the rule of damdupat has once been applied in any account directed to be taken by the Court, and interest equal in amount to the principal sum has been allowed in the account, the application of such rule has the effect of preventing the allowance of any further interest, not only for the period of six months allowed for redemption, but also subsequently without limitation of time. RAM KANYE AUDICARY v. CALLY CHURN DEY. I. L. R., 21 Calc., 840

31. ————— Rule of damdupat—Mortgage by Mahomedan to Hindu—Assignment of mortgaged land by mortgagor to Hindu assignee—Subsequent suit by mortgagee against assignee—Interest.—A, a Mahomedan, having in 1869 mortgaged certain land for Rs1 to B, a Hindu, afterwards assigned it to C, who was also a Hindu. At the date of this assignment the interest due on the mortgage (Rs122-15-10) was much more than the principal debt. B (the mortgagee) subsequently sued A and C for Rs270, being Rs1 for principal and Rs269 for interest. A did not appear. C contended that, the plaintiff and himself being Hindus, the law of damdupat applied, and that only as much interest as principal could be recovered. The lower Courts passed a decree for the principal (Rs1) together with all interest due at the date of the assignment to C. They disallowed subsequent interest, as the amount then due was already more than the principal. On appeal to the High Court,—Held (confirming the decree) that C was not personally liable to pay anything at all, but that land which he had purchased was charged with the amount due at the date of his purchase. Unless, therefore, he wished the land to be sold, he should pay that amount. The rule of damdupat did not apply in this case to the original mortgagor, who was a Mahomedan. He charged the land with a debt which included principal and interest, and he and his land were liable for both. He could not by any assignment prejudice his creditor or reduce the amount due to him, nor could he by assigning his land to a Hindu free it from any charge that existed on it at the date of the assignment. HABIBAL GIRDHARLAL v. NAGAR JEYSAM

32. ————— Rule of damdupat—Mortgage—Original mortgagor a Hindu—Assignment of mortgage to Mahomedan purchaser—Suit by Mahomedan purchaser for redemption—Rule of damdupat how far applicable.—A Hindu mortgaged his property in 1843 to a Mahomedan for Rs150, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. On the 5th April 1880, the Hindu mortgagor's interest was sold to the plaintiff, who was a Mahomedan. In March 1893, the plaintiff sued for redemption, both parties to the suit being Mahomedan. Held that as long as the mortgagor was a Hindu (i.e., until 1880) the rule of damdupat applied, and that, as soon as the interest doubled the principal, further interest stopped. The sum of Rs300 was therefore the full amount of debt for which the land could be charged and liable in the hands of a Hindu debtor. But on the 5th April 1880 the plaintiff (a Mahomedan) became the debtor. The rule of damdupat then no longer applied: the stop was removed, and interest again began to run. The decree therefore ordered the plaintiff to redeem on payment of Rs300 (i.e., double the principal Rs150) with further interest at Rs12 per annum from the date of his purchase (5th April 1880) until payment. *ALI SAHEB v. HINDU LAW—WIDOW—continued.1. INTEREST IN ESTATE OF HUSBAND—continued.

3. ———— Immoveable property—Nature of right.—A Hindu widow has an absolute right to the fullest beneficial interest in her husband's property inherited by her for her life. She takes as heir a proprietary estate in the land absolute for some purposes, although in some respects subject to special qualifications, and her disposition of the property is good for her life. The proposition that a widow has no estate in her husband's immoveable property, but only the personal enjoyment of the usufruct, is untenable. *KAMAVADHANI VENKATA SUBHAYA v. 4. ———— Possession of, and partition between, co-widows of estate left by their deceased husband.—Possession of the estate left by their deceased husband was taken by two widows of a deceased Hindu, who, being childless, had before his death adopted a son, to whom also, by will, he bequeathed his estate. The adopted son died soon after the testator. Held that the widows had a possessory title or interest in the estate, notwithstanding that a preferable title might exist in others through the deceased legatee; also that the estate, being jointly held by them, was partible, and either widow might maintain a suit for partition. *SUNDAR v. 6. ———— Widow succeeding in default of male issue—Qualified interest.—A widow, who succeeds to the estate of her husband in default of male issue, whether she takes by inheritance or by survivorship, does not take a mere life-estate. The whole estate is for the time vested in her, though in some respects for only a qualified interest. She holds an estate of inheritance to herself and the heirs of her husband; and upon the termination of that estate, the property descends to those who would have been the heirs of the husband if he had lived up to and died at the moment of her death. *MONIRAM KOLITA v. 15. — Savings or accumulations by widow.—One M died in 1872, leaving him surviving his widow F, and a grandson G, and a daughter-in-law. The widow (F) on her husband's death became entitled to a widow's estate in his immoveable property, and accordingly entered into possession and management thereof. Under certain agreements made between her and one K, the latter received the rents of certain portions of the said immoveable property, and in consideration paid F certain fixed annual sums. On the 26th May 1883, there was a balance of Rs. 1,787-10-3 due from K to F in respect of the yearly privilege of recovering and receiving the said rents. F died intestate on the 18th December 1884, and the plaintiff, having obtained letters of administration to her estate, demanded payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,787-10-3 from K. It appeared that, after F's death, K had paid this sum to G, who was F's grandson and the reversioner expectant on the determination of F's widow's estate, and on her death had succeeded to all the immoveable property as the right heir of her husband M. The question was whether the said sum of Rs. 1,787-10-3 belonged to F's estate, or remained portion of the immoveable property of M, and as such properly payable to G as his heir. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover it as part of F's estate. There was nothing to show it to be "savings or accumulations" so as to give it to the heir to her husband's estate. RIVETT-CARNAC (ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL, BOMBAY) v. JIVIDAI L. L. Where a Hindu widow has acquired property purchased by moneys borrowed on the credit of her husband's estate, it is equitable that the heir of the husband, who takes in succession to her, should not be permitted to take such acquired property freed from the liability of satisfying a debt contracted by the widow to enable her to make the acquisition, and if the heir claims to take the acquisition, he is bound to satisfy the debt. She shall have 4 annas of talukhs A and B, in the possession of my step-mother, for her necessary expenses and the performance of charity. According to the above conditions, my step-mother shall take possession of these two properties and my wife of all the remaining real and personal estate." Held that the widow took only a life-estate. Held, further, that the daughters were entitled to a declaration that a sale by the widow to the defendants of the properties given by the will was for her life only, the defendants being unable to show any justifying necessity which would entitle her to sell the entire estate. *KULLIAN-BUTTI KORA v. N died intestate in 1880 in H's lifetime, and H then claimed the whole estate, contending that under the will she and N had been joint tenants, and that on his death she took his share by survivorship. N left a widow, the plaintiff L. Held that under the will H took only a widow's estate in half the property, and that (subject to her right, as a Hindu widow, to a widow's estate in a half share) the entire property vested absolutely in N. On N's death, the property (subject as aforesaid) vested in the plaintiff L, as his widow and heir, for a widow's estate, and she became entitled to joint possession with the defendant H. of one of the co-heirs in her character of heiress and legal personal representative of her deceased husband, declared that she was entitled to the sum therein expressed as the share of her deceased husband "for her sole absolute use and benefit." Held (reversing the decree of the Supreme Court at Calcutta) that these words were not to receive the same interpretation as a Court of equity in England would put upon them, as creating a separate estate in the widow; but that the deed must be construed with reference to the situation of the parties and the rights of the widow by the Hindu law, and that, as the deed recited that she claimed and received the money as her husband's share in the joint estate in her character as his heiress and legal personal representative, such words must be construed to mean that it was to be held by her in severalty from the joint estate, and as a Hindu widow she had only a life-estate in the corpus, the same at her death devolved as assets of her deceased husband upon his personal representative in succession. 26. ——— Gift of moveable and immoveable property—Power of alienation.—Under a gift of moveable and immoveable property by a Hindu to his wife, the wife takes only a life-estate in the immoveable property, and has no power of alienation over it, while her dominion over the moveable property is absolute. A Hindu wife takes by the will of her husband no more absolute right over the property bequeathed than she would take over such property if conferred upon her by gift during the lifetime of her husband, and whether in respect of a gift or a will, it is necessary for the husband to give her in express terms a heritable right or power of alienation. KOONJEBHARI DHUR v. The lower Appellate Court, finding that A was separate in estate from plaintiff and the sole and exclusive owner of the house, held the gift to the wife and the sale by her to defendant valid, and dismissed the suit. On appeal, plaintiff contended that he was the heir of the donee, and that, under the deed of gift, she had no power to alienate. Held that, from the wording of the deed of gift, it appeared that the husband intended to give and did give to his wife an heritable estate in, and power of alienation over, the property the subject of the gift, and therefore the sale by the wife was valid. Koonjebhari Dhar v. G having died, R, claiming as mother and heiress of G, joined with D, in bringing a suit for partition against K and the other members of the joint family. The decree in the suit, which was made by consent of all parties, declared R and D entitled to two equal twelfth parts of the joint estate, and K to one-twelfth share, and referred it to certain persons as arbitrators, and not as commissioners only, to make the award. The arbitrators allotted certain land to R and D as their two-twelfths of the joint immoveable property, "to be held by them in severalty absolutely;" to K they allotted other land as his

I have no further connection with the said land. Paying the taxes, revenue, etc., to Government, and causing mutation of names, you will continue, with your sons and grandsons in succession, to enjoy possession in perfect peace." In a suit brought by K against the executor of E, to recover a moiety of the property awarded to her and D and of the property conveyed to them by the bill of sale, upon an allegation that E took this property only as mother and heiress of G, and that upon her death it devolved upon him as G's next of kin.—Held (reversing the decision of MACPHERSON, J.) that E took an absolute estate, and not merely a life-interest, both in the property awarded to her and in the property conveyed by the bill of sale. *BOLYN CHAND DUTT v. Judgment of the High Court reversed on the facts. LEHIT KONWAR v. ROOP NARAIN SINGH

37. — Alienation—Reversioner—Limitation.—C, the brother of A and B, died in 1835, and an order for mutation and registration of names having been obtained by A and the heirs of B on the 28th March 1835, K, the widow of C, instituted a suit to have the order cancelled and to have her possession confirmed, and on the 4th September 1837 obtained a decree, which, however, was reversed on appeal on the 24th July 1839, the Appellate Court declaring that K was not entitled as her husband's heir. A special appeal having been preferred to, and admitted by, the High Court, an ikrarnamah was filed by K on the 15th September 1841, reciting that she had "given up her claim of having the appeal heard" "as a matter of amicable adjustment settling all disputes" as therein provided. By the ikrarnamah it was provided that the mulkint and mokurari of certain mouzas should be held by A and B's heirs, and that mouzas X, Y, and Z should remain in K's possession for her life without power to make sur-i-peshgi leases or mortgages, and that on her death such mouzas should pass to the heirs of A and B. On the ikrarnamah being filed, the Court struck off the appeal and made an order on the 14th September 1841, to the effect that the ikrarnamah should "in no way affect the rights of the minors," the heirs of A and B. Held that the ikrarnamah and order of the 14th September 1841 could not be regarded as affecting the rights of the reversioners of C's estate on the expiration of the widow's life-interest. Held also that the suit by K and the succeeding compromise was tantamount to an alienation by her, and that there was consequently no adverse possession during her life, and that the period of limitation in a suit by the reversioners must be calculated from her death. SHRO NARAIN SINGH v. HINDU LAW—WIDOW—continued.2. POWER OF WIDOW—continued.(b) POWER OF DISPOSITION OR ALIENATION.

38. ——— Power of alienation—Alienation for religious or charitable purposes—Necessity—Right of Crown taking property to set aside alienation—Onus probandi.—Under the Hindu law, a widow, though she takes as heir, takes a special and qualified estate. If there be collateral heirs of her husband, she cannot of her own will alienate the property except for special purposes. For religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes. To support an alienation for the last, she must show necessity. The restrictions on her power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and independent of the existence of heirs capable of taking on her death. If for want of heirs the property, so far as it has not been lawfully disposed of by her, passes to the Crown, the Crown has the same power of protecting its interest as an heir by impeaching any injurious alienation by the widow. The onus is on those who claim under an alienation from a Hindu widow to show that the transaction was within her limited powers. COLLECTOR OF MASULIPATAM v. CAVALY VENKATA NARAINAPAH [3 W. R., P. C., 61; 8 Moore's L. A., 529]

39. ——— Power to dispose of property by will—Right to dispose of.—A Hindu widow succeeding to the immoveable property of her deceased husband, and also claiming as heir to her only daughter, who died after her father childless and unmarried, is only entitled during her life to a widow's estate. The doctrine laid down in the original Court that ancestral property after partition can be disposed of by will, in the same way as self-acquired property, disapproved of, as opposed to the authorities and general spirit of Hindu law. *LAKSHMIBAI v. 41. ——— Alienations by a widow of her husband's estate in order to pay his time-barred debts—Widow's status as distinguished from that of a manager—Liability of alienation—Rights of reversioners.—According to the Hindu law, a widow is competent to alienate her husband's estate for the purpose of paying his debts, even though they may be barred by the law of limitation. Her alienations for such a purpose are legal and binding on the reversionary heirs. A widow stands in a different position from that of a manager of a joint family. The latter can act only with the consent, express or implied, of the body of co-parceners. In the widow's case, the co-parceners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can therefore do what the body of co-parceners can do,

47. ——— Power to dispose of property by will.—A woman cannot execute a will regarding any property she inherits from her husband or father. and that she consequently could dispose of it by will.
VENKATA RAMA RAO v. VENKATA SURIYA RAO

[I. L. R., 1 Mad., 361]

In the same case in the Privy Council it was held as follows, affirming the decision of the High Court: The testamentary power of a Hindu female over her stridhanam being commensurate with her power of disposition over it in her lifetime, and both being absolute, no distinction can be taken as regards a widow's power of disposition by will over immovables in the purchase of which she has invested money given to her by her husband. Such estate is subject to the disposition which the general law gives her the power to make of her stridhanam. VENKATA RAMA RAO v. VENKATA SURIYA RAO

Right of alienation of moveable and immoveable property.—A Hindu widow's right to alienate moveable property inherited from her husband, without the consent of his heirs, is absolute. With respect to immoveable property inherited from her husband, a Hindu widow is little more than a tenant for life and trustee for the heirs of her husband, and she is restricted from alienating it by her sole independent act, unless for necessary subsistence, or for purposes beneficial to the deceased. BECHAR BHAGAVAN v. Right of alienation of immoveable property.—Held that a Hindu widow, having a life-interest only in immoveable property inherited from her husband, has an independent power of sale over the same to the extent of such life-interest and no further. MAYARAM BHAI RAM v. MOTIRAM GOVINDRAM

Widow's power to dispose of moveables bequeathed to her by her husband—Mayukha law.—Held that a widow in Gujarat, under the law of Mayukha, had power to bequeath moveable property taken by her under the will of her husband which gave her express power of free disposition. Gadadhar Bhat v. Chandrabhagabai, I. L. R., 17 Bom., 690, distinguished. PER RAMAIAH, J.—There is a three-fold distinction between the moveable and immoveable property, between title by bequest and a title by inheritance, and a distinction between the Mayukha and Mitakshara, which must be borne in mind before the rights of a widow in Gujarat, claiming under a will which gave her express powers of free disposition over the residue of moveable property, are negatived solely on the authority of the Full Bench decision quoted above. If the widow in this case had made no disposition herself, the moveable property, in respect of which freedom of disposition had been allowed her, would have gone to the reversioner as her husband's heir. MOTILAL LALUBHAI v. 57. Widow's estate—Moveable property.—The restriction placed by the Hindu law on a widow's power of alienation of her husband's estate extends to moveable as well as immoveable property. NARASIMAH v. VENKATADRI [I. L. R., 8 Mad., 290]

58. Right of childless widow to alienate moveable property—Mithila law—Inheritance.—Under the Mithila law, a childless Hindu widow, although she cannot alienate the immoveable property, has an absolute right over the moveable property inherited from her husband, and can alienate it in any manner she pleases, and she has also an absolute power to dispose of the profits of the estate during her lifetime. BIRAJUN KOSH v. LUCHMI NARAIN MAHATA [I. L. R., 10 Cal., 392]

59. Immoveable property—Will—Bequest—Gift.—An absolute bequest by a Hindu of his separate immoveable property to his widow confers on her as full dominion and power of alienation over that property as if the bequest had been made to a stranger. SETH MULCHAND BADDHARNA v. BAI MANCHA . I. L. R., 7 Bom., 491

60. Power to dispose of property by will.—Where a widow of a Hindu who had received a share of the estate of her husband, consisting of moveable and immoveable property, from her co-widows, purported to dispose of her property by will to the prejudice of the co-widows, Held that the alienation was invalid. GURUJI REDDI v. CHINNAMMA [I. L. R., 7 Mad., 93]

61. Grant of money in lieu of maintenance—Power of disposal.—Where a sum of money was given to a widow, without restriction, in lieu of maintenance, by her deceased husband's family, Held that it became absolutely hers, and that she could dispose by will of landed property acquired by means of it. NELLAIKUMARU CHETTI v. MARAKATHAMMAL . I. L. R., 1 Mad., 166

62. Gift—Interest with husband in joint property.—Where a Hindu wife has a joint interest with her husband in landed properties, partly acquired by purchase, partly (as sowdayakam) by gift from her father, Held that she was entitled on her husband's death to part with her interest in those properties. MADHAVARAYYA v. TIRTHA SAMI . I. L. R., 1 Mad., 307

63. Restriction on alienation—Proof of legal necessity.—The restrictions on a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate. Their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. The plaintiffs sued as purchasers of the equity of redemption from S, a Hindu widow, to redeem a mortgage effected by her husband B. The mortgage deed recited that a portion of the mortgaged land was held by B, not as owner, but as mortgagee from a third party. S was alive when the suit was instituted, but she died after the settlement of issues. The plaintiff then filed a supplementary claim to succeed as B's next heir. The defendants (the sons of the mortgagee) contended that the plaintiff could not redeem because the sale by S was invalid. They also claimed compensation for loss of the rents and profits of a portion of the mortgaged property redeemed from B by the original owner. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim. In appeal, the District Judge confirmed his decree, being of opinion that the sale was valid as against the defendants, because there were no collateral heirs. On appeal to the High Court, Held, following the decision of the Privy Council in Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Venkata Narrainapak, 2 W. R., P. C., 61: 8 Moore's I. A., 529, that the plaintiffs, who were bound to make out their title, could not succeed on the strength of an alienation by a Hindu widow, unless they proved that the alienation was made for purposes which the Hindu law recognized as necessary. *DHONDO BANCHANDRA v. 64. Adoption made on promise of settlement by adoptive father on adopted son—Specific performance, Right to—Alienation by widow in accordance with promise—Limitation—Immoveable property.—Where a member of the Talabda Koli caste of Hindus, by an express promise to settle his property upon the boy, induced the parents of the defendant to give him their son in adoption, but died without having executed such settlement, Held that the equity to compel the heir and legal representative of the adoptive father specifically to perform his contract survived; and the property in the hands of his widow was bound by that contract. Therefore, when the widow of the adoptive father, nearly thirty years after his death, gave effect to his undertaking by executing a deed of gift of his property in her hands in favour of the adopted son, Held that such alienation was valid as against the next heir by blood of the adoptive father, and he could not, on the death of the widow, avail himself of the plea of limitation which she had waived. The nature of a Hindu widow's estate in immoveable property considered. BHARA NAHANA v. PARSHU HARI [I. L. R., 2 Bom., 67]

67. Widow with certificate under Act XXVII of 1860—Ground for setting aside sale—Fraud.—The sale by a widow (who has obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to collect the debts due to her husband's estate) of a money-decree belonging to her husband's estate cannot be set aside except on the ground of fraud, either as not being the heir and selling what she had no power to transfer, or as making a paper transfer to avoid the effect of execution. BHAGWAN DASS v. LUCHMEER NABAIN . . . 2 W. R., Mta., 19

68. Sale by widow with consent of heirs.—An adopted son is not actually precluded from questioning acts done by his mother during his minority or before his adoption; but a sale by a widow, with the consent of all legal heirs at the time existing, and ratified by decrees of Court, is binding on reversionary heirs as well as on an adopted son adopted long after the sale. *RAJ-KRISHNO ROY v. 69. Gift by Hindu widow of her own interest and that of consenting reversioner.—A Hindu widow in possession can, with the consent of a reversioner, make a valid gift, which will operate, so far as the interest of the widow and that of the consenting reversioner are concerned. *Rang Srimutty Dibeak v. 70. Gift with consent of reversioner—Subsequently-born reversioners.—The widow of a separated Hindu, being in possession as such widow of property left by her husband, executed a deed of gift of such property in favour of her daughter's son, her daughter being also a party to the deed. Subsequently to the execution of this deed of gift, the executant's daughter gave birth to another son. Held that the deed in question could not affect more than the life-interests of the executant and her daughter, and could not operate to prevent the succession (as to a moiety of the property) opening up in favour of the subsequently-born son on the death of the survivor of the two ladies. *Ramphal Rai v. 73. Appointment of reversioner as manager—Lease by Hindu widow before he took over charge.—Where a reversioner had obtained a decree for waste against a Hindu widow and was appointed manager of the estate, but did not take over charge of it for six years,—Held a pottah granted by the widow in the meantime was a valid lease. *RAJE CHURN PAUL v. 75. Mortgage by one of two co-widows invalid without the consent of the other—Their joint interest and title by survivorship—Construction of mortgage-deeds.—One of two co-widows mortgaged, without the consent of the other, part of the estate to which they were jointly entitled by inheritance from their deceased husband. Held, upon the construction of the deeds of mortgage executed by her, that they were not so framed as to bind the estate in the possession of the surviving widow after the death of the mortgagor. But assuming that the deeds had been so framed, and that there had been what would have been a justifying necessity for a sole widow, or co-widows jointly, to have mortgaged an estate which had belonged to the deceased husband (a state of things not decided to have existed here), such a necessity could not render a mortgage attempted by one co-widow binding upon the estate, which had descended upon the widows for their joint lives with survivorship between them, so as to affect the interest of the surviving widow. *Bang-wandeen Doobey v. 76. Division by co-widows of their late husband's estate—Alienation by one after the division—Validity of alienation as against surviving widow on decease of alienor.—A Hindu died, leaving two widows who divided his property by a formal registered partition deed, under which each took possession of her share, with powers of alienation over the property comprised in it. Certain alienations were made by one widow, who subsequently died. On the surviving widow claiming the whole of her late husband's property, including the portions so alienated,—Held that there is no legal obstacle to prevent one of two co-widows from so far releasing her right of survivorship as to preclude her from recovering from an alienee, after the other co-widow's death, property given by way of partition to the latter and alienated by her. A widow may alienate for her life any estate which comes to her by virtue of her widowhood, and may therefore enter into such a deed as will preclude her from recovering during her life property which she has alienated, to the full extent of such alienation, provided that it does not extend beyond her life-interest. RAMAKKAL v. RAMASAMI NAICKAN. I. L. R., 22 Mad., 522

77. — Right of widow to sell property inherited from her husband—Suit by reversioner to set aside sale by widow.—B having during his lifetime mortgaged certain property, the income of which was sufficient only to pay interest on a portion of the mortgage-debt, his widow, after his death, sold it before the mortgage-debt fell due. The reversioners sued to set aside the sale. Held that, although there might have been no absolute necessity for the widow to sell the property to provide herself with maintenance, still, as there was no other family property, the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, and the sale by the widow ought to be supported. A widow, like a manager of the family, must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided she acts fairly to her expectant heirs. VENKAJI SESHIDHAR v. VENKURU BABAJI BHEE. I. L. R., 18 Bom., 534

78. — Alienation by widow without legal necessity.—The property in dispute (consisting of 12 thikans or plots of land) was originally held by A and B as tenants-in-common, and they divided the income according to their respective shares. After A's death, his widow adopted C on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that C was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. All these alienations to the defendant were made without any legal necessity. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased C's rights, and, on the widow's death, sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit. Held that A's widow, not having higher powers than those of an ordinary Hindu widow who succeeds as heir to her soulless husband, could only make valid alienations for purposes warranted by the law. As no legal necessity was shown in respect of the alienations in question, which were made long after disputes had commenced between her and her adopted son, they were not binding on him or on his alienee, the plaintiff. ANTAJI v. balance of interest alleged to be due on three previous mortgages, which had been executed by her husband in his lifetime. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagees as to her authority. Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded her powers. By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that, during the life of his minor son, she should not have power to transfer without legal necessity; and that she should have power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts. Held that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid. Notes promising to pay interest, additional to that contracted for in the mortgages, had been signed by the husband, which it was held could not affect the right to redeem, being unregistered. TIKA RAM v. 80. — Assignment by widow of—Decree for mesne profits of her late husband's land in her favour—Execution proceedings by assignee—Objections by reversioners—Validity of assignment.—The widow of a deceased Hindu, having been kept out of possession of land forming portion of her late husband's estate, obtained a decree for possession thereof and for mesne profits. She assigned the decree for mesne profits and subsequently died. Upon the assignee attempting to execute the decree in respect of mesne profits, the reversionary heirs contended that he had no right to do so on the ground that his assignor, the widow, could not alienate the mesne profits so as to endure beyond her lifetime. Held that the right to mesne profits under a decree is not immoveable property, and that the decree was validly assigned. SAMINATHA PILLAI v. 81. — Adopted son's right to impeach alienation unnecessarily made by his adoptive mother before his adoption—Widow, Alienation by—Alienation from widow bound to inquire if legal necessity for alienation—Evidence—Onus of proving necessity for alienation by the widow.—The plaintiff claimed, as the adopted son of one K, to recover possession of his adoptive father's property, which had been mortgaged by his (K's) widow, B (defendant No. 1), to the third defendant B prior to the plaintiff's adoption by her. The property had come into K's possession incumbered with a mortgage effected by her husband, and in order to redeem that mortgage, she mortgaged the property again to one Y. She subsequently paid off Y's debt, amounting to Rs. 629, and in 1876 she mortgaged the property for Rs. 999 to B, who was put into possession. In 1881 she adopted the plaintiff, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the property. He contended that B had no power to alienate or mortgage the ancestral immoveable property of her deceased husband, and he claimed, as the adopted son of K, to be entitled to the property free from the mortgages or other incumbrances with which K had attempted to charge it. For the defendants it was contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff could not impeach transactions effected by his adoptive mother prior to his adoption. Held that the plaintiff, as the adopted son of K, had a right to impeach the unauthorised transactions of his adoptive mother K, who possessed only a widow's restricted power of alienation. The plaintiff was adopted by K to her husband, who was the last owner of the ancestral property. The plaintiff at once succeeded to that property upon his adoption, and as heir of his adoptive father was entitled to object to any alienation made by K on the principle that the restrictions upon a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property on payment of such amount only as was raised by K for the purpose of meeting expenses necessarily incurred by her. Held, further, that the onus of proving the necessity for alienation lay upon K. The Court found that there was no evidence that any sum beyond RS.629, the amount of Y's mortgage, was really required by K, and accordingly directed that the mortgage account should be taken between the plaintiff and K on the footing that the principal of the mortgage-debt was RS.629 only, instead of RS.999. LAKSHMAN BHAI KROKAR v. 85. ———— Lease granted by Hindu widow while in possession of widow's estate.—A widow in possession of her widow's estate in a zamindari made a grant of a patni tenure under it to a lessee at a rent. In this suit, brought by the reversionary heir, on her death, with the object of having the grant set aside as invalid as against him, the patni lease was not proved to have been made with authority or from necessity justifying the alienation by the widow. Held that the patni was, on the death of the widow, only voidable, and not of itself void; so that the plaintiff, the next inheritor of the zamindari, might then elect to treat it as valid. MODHU SUDAN SINGH v. 88. ———— Grant by widow of jungleburi tenure—Power to bind reversioners.—The question whether a jungleburi tenure granted by a Hindu widow is binding on reversioners depends on the circumstances of the land. Quere—Whether such a tenure granted in respect of a chur where no legal necessity on behalf of the widow is shown could under any circumstances be binding on the reversioners. DEBOMOYI GUPTA v. DAVIS [I. L. R., 14 Cal., 382]

89. ———— Accumulations by Hindu widow—Accumulations, Period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow.—The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. Where she invests her income making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investments, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. GAIR CHUNDER ROY v. 90. ———— Accumulations—Period up to which accumulation may be dealt with—Intention to accumulate.—Under the will of N C M, the testator left his estate to his brother, provided that, within a term of eight years, no son should be born to such brother, capable of being adopted as a son of the testator, in accordance with certain conditions made in the will. These conditions failed, and on the expiration of the term of eight years, the estate vested in the brother. The will made no provision for disposal of the rents and profits of the estate during the period the succession thereto was in abeyance. Disputes having arisen between the widow of the testator and his brother as to the right to such rents and profits, the brother eventually agreed to pay, and did pay, over to the widow a large sum by way of settlement of these disputes, for which sum the widow executed a release.

HINDU LAW—WIDOW—continued.2. POWER OF WIDOW—concluded.

The widow invested the sum so received in Government securities, and twenty years afterwards created with this fund a trust in favour of one G C E, and appointed B trustee thereof. On the death of the widow, the daughters of the testator tried to set aside this trust, claiming the funds as a portion of their father's estate with which the widow had no right to deal. Held that, as the accumulations were handed over to the widow by the person entitled to the reversion after the estate had vested in him, and a release had been entered into between them, no presumption arose that the fund in question had been accumulated by the widow for the benefit of other heirs of the testator, and that, there being no such presumption, the facts of the case must be looked at to ascertain the intention of the parties regarding this fund. Held as to this that the conduct of the widow evidenced no intention to accumulate the sum received by her for the benefit of any person but herself, or that she ever intended to give up the power of disposing, expending, or dealing with it in any way. SOWDAMINI DASSI v. 88. ———— Effect of decree against Hindu widow—How far binding on inheritance.—The same principle which has prevailed in England as to tenants-in-tail representing the inheritance would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow, as there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow. A decree in a suit for a zamindari by a Hindu widow binds those claiming the zamindari in succession to her, unless it can be impeached on some special ground. KATTAMA NAUCHAN v. the revenue due. The mortgagee then sued the person in possession of the talukh, a Hindu lady, widow of the original mortgagor, seeking, under s. 9 of Act I of 1845, to obtain from her personally repayment of the money paid to save the estate from sale; not making the reversioners parties, and not praying that the talukh might be sold to pay the amount due. A decree was given in that suit to the mortgagee, on the execution of which decree the reversioners intervened. Held by the Privy Council that the mortgagee had no charge on the estate, and was not entitled to have it sold to pay the amount due; the action so brought was only a personal action, and the decree gave no remedy against the land; and it was intimated that this ruling did not affect the general doctrine that, in a suit brought by a third person, the object of which is to recover or to charge an estate of which a Hindu widow is the proprietress, she will as defendant represent and protect the estate as well in respect of her own as of the reversionary interest. NAGENDRA CHUNDER GHOSE v. 94. — Decree in suit for arrears of rent—Decree against widow in representative capacity—Purchaser, Rights of.—A sued, under Act X of 1859, the widow of Z, as widow of Z and guardian of Z's son, for arrears of rent due by Z. He obtained a decree in 1862 against the widow as Z's representative, but it was declared that Z's son was not liable, on the ground that he had been adopted into another family. In a regular suit, A obtained a decree declaring Z's son to be the heir of his natural father Z. Certain estates of the deceased were then, in 1867, put up for sale under Act XI of 1859, in execution of A's decree for rent, and A became the purchaser. The certificate stated that the sale was of the right and interest of the widow, and that it took place under the decree in the regular suit. B, the holder of a prior decree for rent against Z, having failed to obtain execution against the same property, then sued A and Z's son for a declaration that he was entitled to sell the property on the ground that it had come to Z's son as Z's heir, and that only the interest of the widow (who had no interest) had been purchased by A. Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) A was entitled to the property. decrees were for arrears of rent which had accrued due after the death of the husband; and the suits were brought against the widow alone, the reversioner not being made a party. In a suit by the purchaser of the talukhs from the reversioner against the purchasers at the execution-sale to recover possession of the talukhs,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The decrees for arrears of rent were a personal debt of the widow, and not a debt against the estate of the deceased husband. Such decrees can be enforced by the sale of her interest only, except where the proceeding is one which authorizes the sale of the tenures under Bengal Act VIII of 1859. Even assuming them to be a charge on the husband's estate, the onus was on the defendants to prove that such charge was created by legal necessity, which they had failed to do. MOHINA CHUNDER ROY CHOWDHRY v. 99. ———— Execution of decrees against widow as representing estate—Sale in execution of decrees—Widow's interest under deed of adoption—Right of purchaser against adopted son.—The plaintiff sued to follow into the hands of the defendant certain property to which the latter had by transfers acquired the title of the purchaser at an auction-sale held in June 1848. The ground of his claim was that the late owner, who died before the sale, had left his widow a permission to adopt a son, and thereupon in 1858 she had adopted the plaintiff. His contention was that the sale was of the widow's interest merely, the permission to adopt having given to her, in the event of an adoption, a life-interest in the property, and that, upon her death in 1866, his interest accrued. Held that, as the proceeds of the execution-sale were not applied to satisfy only a liability incurred after the owner's death, but also decrees for other debts, for which the estate was liable, there was no substantial ground to impeach the long title acquired by the respondent. M died, leaving a widow, N, and two sons, B and C; and on his death, his sons B and C took possession of their father's estate, and entered into an agreement with their mother, N, to pay her Rs200 per annum for maintenance, and hypothecated some villages as security for due payment. B died and C remained in exclusive possession of the property.

After the death of C, his widows, R and D, and afterwards D alone, took possession of the estate. N sued D for arrears of maintenance accrued since the death of C and obtained a decree. In execution of that decree, she attached the rights and interests of D in certain properties, but she died before any sale took place. The plaintiff, the son of K, then obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 as representative of N. He was appointed a guardian of K, who was, in a suit brought by him before his insanity and before the death of N, declared, by a decree made in 1848, entitled to the estate of C as reversioner. The plaintiff executed the decree obtained by N, and caused the properties, which had been before attached, to be sold in 1866. Some time after D died, and the plaintiff then sued the purchaser to recover possession of the property as the representative of his father under the decree of 1848, but was defeated on the ground set up by the defendants, the purchasers, that his father was no longer heir to C by reason of supervenient insanity when the succession opened out to him on the death of N. The plaintiff then brought this suit to establish his own title to the property as heir of C. It was contended by the defendants, among other things, that by the sale in execution in 1866, under the decree obtained by N against D, the absolute proprietary title passed, and not the life-interest of the widow only. Held that the arrears of maintenance for which the sale in 1866 took place was the personal debt of D, and that nothing but her life-interest passed under the sale. BHAJMOOKUN LALL AWUSTEE v. 107. ———— Sale of right, title, and interest of Hindu widow—Estate taken by purchaser.—The test to be applied in order to determine the exact interest which passes at a sale under the words "right, title, and interest" of a Hindu widow in any properties depends upon the question whether the suit in which the sale was directed was one brought against the widow upon a cause of action personal to herself, or one which affects the whole inheritance of the property in suit. *Bajyan Doobey v. has, for some purposes, only a partial or qualified right, title, and interest in the estate which was her husband's, yet for other purposes she represents an absolute interest therein. The question whether, on the sale of the right, title, and interest of the widow in execution of a decree, the whole interest or inheritance in the family estate does or does not pass, depends on the nature of the suit in which the execution of the decree takes place. If the suit is a personal claim against the widow, then merely the widow's limited estate is sold. If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the family estate, or upon a cause not merely personal against her, then the whole of the inheritance passes by the execution-sale. The judgment which the decree has followed may be examined in order to determine which of these two results attends the execution-sale of the widow's right, title, and interest. Subsequently a personal decree was obtained against the widow, and the land, being sold in execution, was purchased by the defendant in the present suit, in which the first plaintiff was the nephew and reversioner of the deceased husband. Held that the suit against the widow being on a personal claim, only her limited interest in the property was sold in execution, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the property. *Jugul Kishore v. by inheritance, obtained a decree, and were put into possession. G, one of the sons of C, subsequently brought a suit against M and the legal representatives of K, then deceased, and also against J (to whom K had sold a portion of the property after the decree), and obtained a decree with mesne profits for his share of the same property. G then sold the decree to E, who executed it for mesne profits against J alone, and realized the entire decretal amount from him. J thereupon brought two suits for contribution against M and the legal representatives of K, on account of the mesne profits payable by them, according to their respective shares, and obtained decrees. In execution of one of these decrees passed against M, he sold the property in suit belonging to the estate of N, and purchased a moiety of it himself. In a suit on the death of M, by the reversionary heirs of N to recover possession of his share of the property, in which his widow M had only a life-interest, on the allegation that only her life-interest, and not the entire estate, passed,—Held that the suit for contribution brought by J was a suit to recover a debt due by the estate. The amount of the debt in the shape of mesne profits had been decreed against M and others, as representing the estate of N and K, and it was not therefore a personal debt of M. 110. —Decree against widow how far binding on minor son—Parties—Representation—Sale of equity of redemption—Mortgage—Redemption.—A widow does not represent the estate so as to bind the son when the existence of the minor son is, from whatever cause, altogether ignored, and there is nothing on the face of the proceedings to show that she is sued as representing the minor son. Accordingly, where the plaintiff, a minor, sought to redeem a certain property from the defendant, who had purchased the equity of redemption at an auction-sale, in execution of a decree obtained against the plaintiff's mother alone as representative of her deceased husband,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. The plaintiff having been ignored, the inheritance had not been substantially represented in the suit against his mother alone, and the plaintiff's right to the equity of redemption consequently remained unaffected by the sale to the defendant. *AKORA DADA v. death M, a daughter of H, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently, S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and upon these findings gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi, to maintain the suit. Also that the rule whereby decrees obtained against a Hindu widow succeeding to her husband's estate as heir are binding by way of res judicata against all who in the order of succession come after her and in that sense may be dealt with as her representatives, was limited to decrees fairly obtained against the widow in a contested and bona fide litigation, and would not apply to the compromise effected by K, which could scarcely be regarded as on a higher footing than an alienation which the widow in possession of her husband's divided estate might have made, and which the plaintiff distinctly alleged had not been fairly obtained. *Anand Koor v. 112. ———— Decree against widow—Liability of reversioners for acts of widow.—Costs of suit for possession.—A Hindu, governed by the Bengal school of Hindu law, brought a suit for possession of a certain talukh, but died before decree, leaving him surviving a widow and two daughters. The widow was substituted in the suit instead of her husband, and she obtained a decree for possession. By a summary order made in execution of the decree the widow was put in possession of the talukh as well as of certain lands, which lands were claimed by a person not a party to the suit, as lands not belonging to the talukh. The claimant afterwards brought a suit for these lands against the widow. The widow died during the suit, and was succeeded by her daughters, who also died after a decree for possession of the lands had been obtained by the claimant against them, when their sons were substituted in their stead as defendants. It appeared that the widow, the daughters, and the daughters' sons had all been in possession of the disputed lands as a portion of the family estate. Held that the reversioners, the daughters' sons, were liable as the legal representatives of the daughters, and as such were liable for all costs incurred in the suit brought by the claimant for possession of the disputed lands. CHUNDER COOMAR ROY v. 113. ———— Sale in execution of mortgage decree against widow—Principle of ascertaining what was purchased—Absent parties—Pleadings—Nature of suit—Hindu widow, when substantial representative of the inheritance—Equitable mortgage.—In a suit for a declaration of right to a particular property and possession thereof, plaintiffs were the reversioners expectant on the death of the mother and heirs of the last male holder at the time when the defendant purchased the property in execution of a decree, purporting to be a decree on an equitable mortgage, passed in a suit against the mother alone. The mother died subsequently, and the property devolved on the plaintiffs. The question in the suit was whether the sale affected the entire interest or only the limited and qualified interest of the Hindu mother. Held by the Appellate Court (affirming the decision of the Court below): that for the purposes of ascertaining what estate was intended to be affected by the decree, the Court might look at the pleadings to ascertain the nature of the suit and what was the relief actually claimed. If there be ambiguity upon the face of the decree as to what was intended to be sold, the absence of the reversioners from the proceedings may constitute a material consideration. Nanomi Babu-ssin v. Modan Mohan, 1. L. R., 13 I. A., 1, followed. It must be taken to be established with reasonable certainty that the inheritance may be bound by a decree in a suit to which the reversioners are not parties. In ascertaining what was purchased by the defendant the real question is what was liable to be sold under the decree and what in fact was sold. The belief of the purchaser that he was buying the absolute, and not the limited, interest, would not avail him if all that was put up for sale was the latter interest. Per AMEEB ALI, J.—The words "mother and heirs" in the advertisement and the sale notification are merely descriptive, and indicate that it was only the qualified interest of the mother that was being sold. Per JENKINS, J. (in the Court below)—It is a rule of general application that the Court will not adjudicate so as to bind absent parties, though the Courts have under certain circumstances permitted the expectant reversioners to be represented by a Hindu widow entitled to immediate and present interest. The principle upon which a widow is regarded as a "substantial representative" of the inheritance is that she, by reason of the common interest, is as much concerned to resist the particular claim as those who are not parties, and that it is but reasonable to suppose that she will fairly and honestly contest the right and uphold and maintain the several interests which are adverse to those of the plaintiff. So where there is a charge created by the ancestor from whom the widow and the reversioners alike derive their title, there is such identity of interest as will justify the widow being treated as the "substantial representative." But where the widow is the person who has created the charge, there is no authority to shew that she sufficiently represents the reversioners. Nogendra Chandra Ghose v. Sreenuttu Kamini Dassee, 11 Moore's I. A., 241, and Mohima Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Ram Kishore Acharjee Chowdhry, 15 B. L. R., 142, referred to. BRINATH DASS v. HARI PADA MITTER 3 C. W. N., 637

114. ———— Decree in compromise made by widow after adoption of son in suit on mortgage executed before adoption.—A, executrix to the estate of her husband, executed a mortgage bond, partly for money due on bonds executed by her husband in his lifetime, and partly for payment of Government revenue due from the estate. She then adopted a son, B, under authority granted by the will of her husband. After the adoption, a suit was brought on the mortgage bond against A, and a decree was passed in terms of a compromise for payment by instalments, the mortgaged property remaining hypothecated as before. Default was made in payment of the instalments, and the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and B was substituted for A in the proceedings in execution. An objection was raised that the compromise decree was only a personal decree against A, and execution could not proceed against B. Held that it was not a mere personal decree against A, but was binding on the estate inherited by B from his adoptive father. *Iskan Chunder Mitter v. 115. ———— Decree against widow for husband's debt.—Liability of family property—Execution-sale—Minor sons bound though not parties to suit—Suit by sons to redeem mortgage.—One G died leaving him surviving a widow and two minor sons. The widow mortgaged some lands and a house to pay off a debt due by her husband. Subsequently a money decree was passed against her for another debt due by her husband, and the greater part of the mortgaged property was sold in execution and the equity of redemption thereof was purchased by the mortgagee (the defendant). The sons were not parties to the suit in execution proceedings. The sons afterwards brought this suit claiming that not having been parties to the suit their interests were not affected by the sale, and praying for redemption. The lower Courts allowed the claim and passed a decree for the plaintiffs. On second appeal,—Held (reversing the decree and remanding the case) that the Courts in determining the effect of an execution-sale must look to the substance of the transaction. The question was whether the debt for which the property was sold was a joint family debt, and whether it was the equity of redemption in the entirety of the mortgaged property that was offered for sale, bargained for, and intended to be bought. It was obvious that, if the sons had been parties to the suit in which the decree had been passed, they would have appeared by their mother and guardian, and there was no reason to suppose that anything would have been differently done in the suit if she had been described as their guardian instead of being treated as the representative of the estate. Under these circumstances, the sons were substantially represented in the suit, and the sale and proceedings therein should be treated as valid, unless the sons were able to show either that their father's debt, which was the foundation of the decree, was of such a nature that no liability arising from it could attach to the family property, or, if they failed in that, they might show that the entirety of the family property was, in fact, not sold. *DEVJI v. 117. ———— Effect of re-marriage.—Act XV of 1856, ss. 2, 3, 5—Inheritance.—A Hindu died leaving a widow and minor son and daughter. The widow re-married after her husband's estate had vested in her son. The son subsequently died, and his step-brother took possession of the property. 121. ———— Act XV of 1856, s. 2—Suit by reversioner to establish his title to property sold in execution of decree obtained against widow as representing husband's estate.—In a suit brought by the plaintiff as the nearest heir of O T, who died intestate in 1873, to set aside a sale of immovable property belonging to the estate of O T which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained by the defendant J against B V, the widow of O T, who had married again and whose husband was the brother of the purchaser at the execution-sale, the Court found on the evidence that the suit against B V was collusive, and that the sale in execution was in fraud of the plaintiff's right. He was therefore entitled to a decree declaring that he was not bound by the sale of the 3rd November 1875, in the suit brought by J against B V as representative of her deceased husband, O T. Held that whether the plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession of the property in the suit depended on the question whether B V's life-estate was defeasible on her re-marriage. She belonged to a caste in which re-marriage was permitted. The following issue was accordingly sent to the lower Court for trial: "Whether, by the usage of the country, the rights and interests of B V by inheritance in her deceased husband's property, the subject of this suit, ceased and determined on re-marriage in 1876 as if she had then died." *PAREKH RANOOB v. 122. ———— Act XV of 1856, s. 2—Re-marriage of widow, who could have re-married before the Act was passed.—Act XV of 1856 was not intended to place under disability or liability persons who could marry a second time before the Act was passed. It was intended to enable widows to re-marry, who could not previously have done so, and s. 2 applies to such persons only. Held therefore that a widow belonging to the sweeper caste, in which there is not, and in 1856 was not, any obstacle by law or custom against the re-marriage for widows, did not by marrying again forfeit her interest in the property left by her first husband; and that the reversioners could not prevent the sale of such interest in execution of a decree for enforcement of hypothecation. *HAR SARAN DAS v. 127. ———— Forfeiture of inheritance—Act XXI of 1850.—D, a Parsi Hindu, residing at Nasik, died leaving two widows, B and P. In a suit by B to recover a moiety of D's estate, P, while admitting that she herself had been leading a life of prostitution since D's death, resisted a partition of his estate, on the grounds that B had, since D's death, cohabited with M, and subsequently married R, both of which allegations B denied. Held that, though by Hindu law incontinence excluded a widow from succession to her husband's estate, yet if the inheritance were once vested, it was not liable to be divested, unless her subsequent incontinence were accompanied by degradation; but that by Act XXI of 1850 deprivation of

Held in the same case on appeal to the Privy Council.—It has not been established that the estate of a widow forms an exception to the general rule that the estate of a Hindu once vested by succession or inheritance is not divested by any act or incapacity which before succession would have formed a ground for exclusion from inheritance. The general rule is stated in the Viramitrodaya, Ch. VIII, "On exclusion from inheritance," paras. 3, 4, and 5. This work, like the Mitakshara, may be referred to in Bengal in cases in regard to which the Dayabhaga is silent. The defence was that the widow had deserted her husband in his lifetime and lived a life of unchastity, and that the plaintiff's right of inheritance was in consequence destroyed. Held that, assuming the widow to have been guilty of unchastity and to have been actually degraded for it, plaintiff's right to inherit her property in the absence of nearer heirs could not be affected by such degradation. Held also that, though Act XXI of 1850 gives relief against the forfeiture of rights of persons deprived of caste on other grounds besides that of renouncing or being excluded from the Hindu religion, it does not restore to an outcaste all the rights which he, as a casteman, could have civilly enforced; nor does it contemplate the restoration of privileges the granting of which would amount to an interference with the autonomy of caste; nor does it interfere with the forfeiture of such a right, as, e.g., to participate with other members of a caste in the benefits of a religious institution appropriated to the members of the caste, or to participate jointly with fellow-castemen in the benefit of a caste institution; nor can it apply where the question is not as to the rights of a degraded person, but as to who is entitled to the property of a degraded person. Kery Kolitany v. Moneram Kolita, 13 B. L. R., 1, referred to. Held further that, though under the Hindu law a loss of caste by expulsion for specified reasons causes forfeiture of rights, it has never broken the relationship of the person expelled to those who remain within the caste, degradation having merely the effect of rendering the tie of kindred but dormant; and, e.g., the degradation of either spouse does not dissolve the tie of marriage. It is impossible to construct out of the Smritis and commentaries a consistent doctrine of "civil death" or "fiction of death." Prostitution does not sever the legal relation, and therefore the degradation of a woman in consequence of her unchastity does not in law entail a cessation of the tie of kindred between her and the members of her natural family or between her and the members of her husband's family. Nor does a wife's adultery, unattended by degradation, dissolve the marriage. Held therefore that the step-son was entitled to inherit the property as apinda of the widow's late husband in the absence of nearer heirs. *SUBBARAYA PILLAI v. Y adopted the plaintiff, and immediately afterwards P adopted the defendant. The plaintiff sought to set aside the adoption of the defendant, alleging that it was invalid, inasmuch as it took place subsequently to his own adoption, and because of P being an unchaste widow. Held that the adoption of the plaintiff was invalid. After the death of R, his estate vested in his widow P, the adoptive mother of the defendant. Her existence and the vesting in her of her husband's estate rendered the elder widow Y incapable of adopting. The estate, having thus vested in P, would not be divested by her subsequent unchastity, and therefore the enquiry into her chastity was irrelevant. KESHAV RAMKRISHNA v. GOVIND GANESH

and in use amongst, Hindus not in the presidency towns only, but from one end of the peninsula to the other. The right to make a will is part of the Hindu law itself. The extent and nature of the disposition which a Hindu testator is capable of making is not a question of public expediency or of custom or usage, but must be regulated by rules to be found in, or directly deduced from, Hindu law. GANENDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. 2. ——— Nature and extent of power.—The testamentary power of disposition by Hindus has been established in Bengal by the decision of Courts of justice. The nature and extent of such power cannot be governed by any analogy to the law of England,—the English system being one of the most artificial character, founded in a great degree on feudal rules, regulated by Acts of Parliament and adjusted by a long course of judicial determination to the wants of a state of society differing as far as possible from that which prevails among Hindus in India. BHOODUN MOTEE DEBIA v. HINDU LAW—WILL—continued.1. POWER OF DISPOSITION—continued.

15. — Power of disposition over ancestral property—Hindu without male issue.—A will by a Hindu without male issue, kinsman, or co-parcener, which, after providing for the maintenance of his widow, daughters, and female relations, devised ancestral as well as other real and personal estate to trustees upon certain charitable trusts, was impeached by reason, first, that the testator had authorized his widow in an event which happened to adopt a son, which act would have rendered him incompetent to exercise a testamentary power; secondly, that at the time of the execution of the will the testator was not of sufficient mental capacity to make a testamentary disposition; and thirdly, that the testator being a Hindu had no power by law of devising ancestral estate by will. Held on appeal, affirming the decision of the Sudder Court in India, first, that although, in the absence of male issue of the deceased, there was a strong presumption, arising from religious considerations, in favour of a delegation by the deceased to his widow of authority to adopt a son for him, yet that the evidence entirely failed to prove that fact; secondly, that the evidence established his mental capacity at the time of executing the will; and thirdly, that by the Hindu law prevailing at Madras a Hindu in possession without issue male, kinsman, or co-parcener, had power to make a will disposing of ancestral as well as acquired estate. NAGALUTCHMEE UMMAL v. GOROO NADARAJA CHETTY 6 Moore's L. A., 309

16. — Extent of power of disposition—Bequest to idol—Right of widow to maintenance.—Although the Courts in India recognize the power of a Hindu to make a will, yet the extent of the power of disposition by a testator is to be regulated by the Hindu law, and cannot interfere with a widow's right to a proper maintenance. A Hindu by will gave all the moveable and immoveable property to his family idol, and, after stating that he had four sons, he directed that his property should never be divided by them, their sons or grandsons, in succession, but that they should enjoy "the surplus proceeds only," and the will, after appointing one of the sons manager to the estate, to attend to the festivals and ceremonies of the idol, and maintain the family, further directed that, whatever might be the surplus after deducting the whole of the expenditure, the same should be added to the corpus; and in the event of a disagreement between the sons and family, the testator directed that, after the expenses attending the estate, the idol, and the maintenance of the members of the family, whatever nett produce and surplus there might be should be divided annually in certain proportions among the members of the family. At the date of the will the members of the family were joint in estate, food, and worship. The accumulations of the income were divided as directed by the will. Held, first, that the bequest to the idol was not an absolute gift, but was to be construed as a gift to the testator's four sons and their offspring in the male line, as a joint family, so long as the family remained joint, and that the four sons were entitled to the surplus of the property after providing for the performance of the ceremonies and festivals of the idol, and the provisions in the will for maintenance; secondly, that the fact of the division of the income arising out of the testator's estate among the members of the family after the testator's death did not constitute a division of the family. One of the sons of the testator died, leaving three sons, one of whom also died without issue, leaving a widow. Held, further, that the direction contained in the will that the property should go in the male line did not exclude the widow of the grandson of the testator, and that the widow was entitled to a third share of a fourth part of the property and accumulations, without prejudice to her right as a Hindu widow, when the property should be divided. SONATUN BYSACK v. 17. — Request for religious purposes—Legacy by an undivided father of a Hindu family.—A Hindu made his will, whereby he bequeathed Rs600 to supply a silver image for a pagoda, and died leaving the defendant, his undivided adopted son, him surviving. He was not shown to have been possessed of any separate property. In a suit by the trustee of the pagoda to recover the above amount, Held that the legacy was not binding on the defendant. RATHNAM v. SIVASUBRAMANIAM I. L. R., 16 Mad., 353

18. — Power to dispose by will—Paternal grandmother inheriting property from maiden grand-daughter—Estate taken by grandmother.—A paternal grandmother in Gujarat, inheriting moveable and immoveable property from her maiden grand-daughter, takes an absolute interest in such property, and on her death the property goes to her heir and not to the heir of the grand-daughter, and the grandmother can dispose of such property by will. GANDHI MAGANLAL MATICHAND v. 25. — Devise away from remote kinsman—Separate property.—The title of a remote kinsman, though heir of a Hindu testator, who died without leaving issue, or any near relative surviving him, and with whom that remote kinsman had not been united in food, worship, or estate, cannot prevail against the title of a devisee of that testator, whether such property was by the testator self-acquired or held in severalty, either by virtue of a partition, or of the non-existence, or, if any did ever exist, the extinction of co-parceners. NAROTTAM JAGJIVAN v. NARSANDAS HURKISANDAS

[3 Bom., A. C., 6

26. — Alienability by co-parcener of his undivided share of ancestral property—Mitakshara law.—It having been contended that as a father and his sons were during his life co-parceners in the family estate, one of such co-parceners being able, according to the decisions of the Court, by act inter vivos to make an alienation of his undivided share binding on the others, it followed that the father might dispose by will of his one-third share. Held that, under the Mitakshara law as received in Bombay, the father could not dispose of his one-third share by will. The doctrine of the alienability, by a co-parcener, of his undivided share, without the consent of his co-sharers, should not be extended, in the above manner, beyond the decided cases. The Bombay Court had ruled that a co-parcener could not, without his co-sharer's consent, either give or devise his share, and that the alienation must be for value. The Madras Court had ruled that, although a co-parcener could alienate his share by gift, that right was itself founded on the right to partition, and died with the co-parcener, the title of the other co-sharers vesting in them by survivorship at the moment of his death. Without a decision as to which of these conflicting views, in regard to alienation by gift, was correct, the principles upon which the Madras Court had decided against the power of alienation by will were held to be sound and sufficient to support that decision. *LAKSHMAN DADA NAIK v. (b) DISHERISON.

29. — Power to disinherit sons—Gift absolute to widow—Absence of express declaration of disherison.—A Hindu died leaving a widow, two infant sons and a daughter, and having made a will in English, of which the following is the material portion: "I give, devise, and bequeath unto my wife, L. D., and her heirs and assigns for ever, all my real and personal estates and effects, and do appoint my said wife sole executrix of this my will." Held (reversing the decision of MACPHERSON, J.) that the wife took an absolute estate with full power of alienating the property, and not merely as trustee and manager for the infant sons. It is not necessary that there should be an express declaration of the testator's desire or intention to disinherit his sons if there is an actual gift to some other persons expressed in clear and unequivocal words. *PROSUNNO COOMAR GHOSH v. D brought her suit to establish her right as widow of C to a moiety of the family property. The representatives of B set up an instrument, which they alleged to be the will of C whereby he bequeathed his share to B, reserving the maintenance to D. The Judge of the Zillah Court of Nuddea held that the alleged will of C was genuine, and dismissed D's suit. The High Court, on appeal, held (1) that D ought, firstly, to have shown her title to sue,—i.e., having admitted the family came from Mithila, she ought to have shown that they were no longer governed by the Mitakshara law; (2) that for several generations the rule of inheritance had been according to the Dayabhaga; (3) that the alleged will was not proved (there was evidence before the Court of the factum of the will adequate to the proof of an ordinary will, but the Court held that this evidence was outweighed by the internal improbabilities); (4) that if the rule of inheritance was not according to the Dayabhaga, the will was inofficious. On appeal to the Privy Council,—Held, first, it would be a rash conclusion on the state of the evidence in the case to suppose a preference of the law of Bengal likely to be operative on the mind of the testator; and therefore there was no foundation for treating the will as inofficious. Second, it was not necessary to decide whether the rule of inheritance was according to the Dayabhaga or the Mitakshara. Third, the evidence was adequate to the proof of an ordinary will, and there was no internal improbability of the will sufficient to discredit it. SURENDRA NATH ROY v. HIRAMANI BARMANI (1 B. L. 51. ———— Proof of execution of will—Handwriting.—By will dated in 1847 a testator directed his property to be held in a particular way, and gave his widow power to adopt. In 1848 she adopted a son under the will, with the knowledge of the members of the family, and the will was for a period of twenty-seven years generally recognized and acted on by the testator's family. The Judicial Committee held (reversing the decree of the High Court), in accordance with the finding of the Principal Sudder Ameen, that the will was proved. Where a will was executed by the testator signing with the Bengali letter "M" and it was argued that the testator being in very weak health, the firm way in which the "M" was written threw discredit upon it, the Judicial Committee preferred the decision of the native Judge on this point to that of the English Judges of the High Court, and expressed doubt as to the value of the style of such writing as evidence in favour of the will being forged. RAJENDRA NATH HALDAR v. HO. ——— Words “share and share alike.”—Life-estate of widow in immovable property.—V and M, Hindus residing in Bombay, made a deed of partition in 1823 of the whole of the family property, moveable and immovable, which had come into their joint enjoyment on the death of their father. V died in 1850, having made a will prepared by an English solicitor, in the English language and form, by which, after various bequests to members of the family, he disposed of the residue of his estate, one-third share to his son V absolutely; another third to his son L absolutely; “and the remaining clear third share to my grandsons, K, V, G, and N, the sons of my late son M, deceased, their and each of their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, share and share alike.” These residuary bequests, it was provided, were not to take effect until after the death of the testator’s widow, who was appointed executrix and manager of the whole estate during her life; but the estate was divided by the award of arbitrators in 1855, after making a provision for the widow, in substantial accordance with the directions of the will. V and L immediately thereafter took possession of their respective third shares of the moveable and immovable estate, but the third share allotted to the four sons of M, who were all still infants, remained unapportioned until 1856, when, on a suit being filed, the greater part of the moveable property was apportioned. The immovable property allotted to them remained unapportioned, and was managed, first, by the widow of M till her death in 1855; then by his eldest son K, till his death, without male issue, in 1869; then by the next eldest son V till his death, without issue, in 1864; and afterwards by the elder of the two surviving sons; and the proceeds were treated throughout as though the property was held in co-parcenary by the four sons as a joint and undivided Hindu family. In a suit brought by L, the widow of K, against K’s surviving brothers, and S, the widow of his brother V, in which L claimed to be absolutely entitled as heir of her husband [and also as heir of her daughter, who died after her husband’s death, childless and unmarried] to a fourth part of the third share of the estate allotted by the award of 1855,—Held in the lower Court (1) that the words “share and share alike,” occurring in the will of V, ought not to be construed as necessarily constituting a tenancy-in-common, with all the incidents attached thereto in English law, but that each of the four sons of M took a separate share in the third of the testator’s residuary estate; the share of each son going on his decease to those who would, according to Hindu (and not according to English) law, be his heirs as a separated Hindu; (2) that with regard to the immovable property devised by the will and allotted by the award to the sons of M, there never was a union of estate, a co-parcenary, from the commencement; and consequently there was no re-union in the sense of the Hindu law, notwithstanding joint enjoyment and common residence; but only postponement for a time, and for purposes of convenience, of an apportionment of the estate, which was accordingly (among other things) decreed. LAKSHMIBAI v. GANPAT MORABA. 4 Bom., O. C., 150

Held on appeal that the language of the testator showed an intention that his grandsons should take the one-third between them in severalty and as members of a divided family, and that the will must be so construed. And the doctrine that ancestral property after partition can be disposed of as self-acquired property was disapproved of as being opposed to the authorities and general spirit of Hindu law. GANPAT MORABA v. 61. ——— “Maharani Sahiba.”
Meaning of, as applied to wife or wives—

Unde Estate Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 13, and 22—
Unregistered will of talukhdar—Decree for maintenance to widow under the will on which her suit was based, though her claim was for a different relief.—A talukhdar who died childless, but having two widows, bequeathed, by an unregistered will, to the “Maharani Sahiba” his entire estate, and gave a power to the same to adopt a son to him; also providing maintenance for both his widows after such adoption. Held that to determine whether the will referred, in such bequest and power, only to the elder or to both of the testator’s wives, extrinsic evidence of his intention was not admissible; but that the true construction was that which would indicate a reasonable and probable intention consistent with his views, as evidenced by his conduct, and his will generally. Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. C., 389, referred to and followed. As his views appeared to favour single heriship, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one, and the donee of the power to adopt being one,—Held that accordingly the words “Maharani Sahiba” were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both. Held also that, as if there had been no will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life-estate of the senior, but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, this was an interest bringing her within the meaning of s. 13, para. I of Act I of 1869; so that maintenance bequeathed to her by the will was payable, notwithstanding its not having been registered (as that section required in other cases) as well out of the talukhdari as out of the non-talukhdari estate of the testator. Held also that this had been rightly decreed to be as she had sued upon the will, although her direct claim in her plaint was not for this, but to share the estate equally with the senior widow, a claim which was dismissed. INDAB KUNWAR v. JAIPAL KUNWAR

62. ———— Life-estate—Bequest of property to an unmarried grand-daughter of testator, and after her death to her children, if any, is a gift of life-interest in such property.—The will of a Hindu contained the following devise in favour of the testator's grand-daughter K, who was unmarried at the date of the testator's death: "When K may marry, there is to be given to her out of my immovable property one house which has been purchased from Shah Virji, Nursi's widow Lillabai.

That (house) is to be given to Chorn K as kanyadan. The rent, which it may yield, K may enjoy after (she) my grand-daughter shall have married. And after K's decease (the ownership of) the said house shall duly be enjoyed by K's children. If by the will of God K should die without (leaving) descendants, then my 'Trustees' are duly to take back the said house into their possession." Held that, under the above clause, K was entitled only to life-estate in the house. KAR-SANDAS NATHA v. LADKAVAHU

63. ———— Request to sons with gifts over—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 82 and 111—Absolute estate given—This appeal related to three clauses in the will of a Hindu, who bequeathed his property to his two sons, one of whom had a son. The other son was childless, his only issue having died before the will was made. There were gifts over on the death of either son. The Courts below, construing the first of the three clauses, decided that each of the two sons took a life-interest in the property comprised in that clause, as tenants-in-common; and that the ulterior interest, not having been validly disposed of, fell into the residuary estate. On this appeal, with reference to s. 82 of "the Indian Succession Act, 1865," made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, some doubt was expressed by the Judicial Committee whether in the clause it sufficiently appeared that the estates given to the sons were only estates for life. It was, however, in the view taken of the other clause of which the construction was in dispute, unnecessary to determine that point. In the next clause to be construed there were words which had been held by the appellate High Court to give to each of the two sons of the testator only a life-estate in a half share of the residuary estate. Whether those words, which followed a gift to the testator's two sons of the whole residue in equal shares, were so clear that only this restricted interest was intended to be given to them, was considered, in like manner, to be open to doubt in regard to the rule of construction imposed by s. 82. But this was also not required to be determined, as this clause, the 13th in the will, was not applicable under the circumstances. It was now determined that the third and last of the disputed clauses, No. 18 in the will, clearly gave the residuary estate to the testator's two sons in equal shares, each an absolute estate, except in the case of the subsequent birth of a son or daughter. The two clauses, 13 and 18, were not, in the Committee's opinion, intended to be read together and reconciled, nor were they mutually explanatory. They were each intended to provide for different circumstances. Held that the two sons of the testator must be declared to have each taken an absolute interest in the half share of the residuary estate. DAMODARDAS TAPIDAS v. DAYADHAI TAPIDAS

64. ———— Absolute estate—Estate vested in trustees.—One D died leaving two sons, G and V. His will contained the following clauses: "5. As to the immovable property which I have, the particulars thereof are as follows: There is one vadi (cart) situated on the Girganum Back Road. In it there are small and large bungalows, chawls, stables, a joys' and malis' sheds, making in all thirteen buildings. Thereof one bungalow, bearing No. 23, shall be given to my two sons, G and V, and to K, the widow of my brother K M, a denizen of paradise, (i.e.) to these three persons, to reside therein, and the remaining bungalows, chawls, stables, and the large bungalow in which I live shall be let for rent. And out of the rent that may be realized therefrom, the expenses of repairs, Government taxes and the servants' wages being paid, the surplus shall be paid to my son G. Out of such surplus this my son G shall pay the expenses of my house, of the maintenance of the said two sons, and of my said sister-in-law, i.e., all such expenses as I carry on, and also Rs 15 per month for the worship of (the deity) Thukorji of my house. In this manner moneys are to be paid as long as there may be son's heirs in my family. And when there may be no son (i.e.) male as heir in my family, the whole property shall be all used on religious and charitable account, as stated in the below-written clause. 8. My two sons and my sister-in-law, making three persons, shall reside in the bungalow No. 23. And if one of them, i.e., my two sons, V, shall disagree with the others, he shall go out of the said vadi at the (Girganum Back Road and reside elsewhere; and as to his (V's) expenses out of the money which my son G may receive from the trustees for defraying the household expenses, he (G) shall continue to pay at the rate of Rs 30 per one month to V for his (V's) own expenses during his and his son's lifetime. And if this my son V should not act peaceably and harmoniously towards this my son G and towards my (said) sister-in-law, then the above-mentioned money shall not be paid to him for expense." The Court of first instance held that, under the will, G was entitled to the property absolutely. Held by the Appeal Court that the proper construction of the will was that G was not entitled to an absolute estate, but was entitled to be paid by the trustees the income for his life, to be assigned by him as mentioned in the will. The circumstance that the estate was vested in trustees and that the income was given as maintenance forbade the estate given to G and V or either of them being construed as an absolute estate. Moreover, as such an estate would admit females in the course of succession, this construction would not give effect to the intention of the testator, but would be to make a new will for him. VELLURHDAS DAMODHAR v. THACKER GORDHANDAS DAMODHAR

65. ——— Principles of construction of operative words in wills—Effect of context upon technical or deadly disposing words used—Gift over—Male line, Succession in—Malik—Putra poutradi krame.—Case of the construction of a will and codicil, dated in 1865 and 1868 respectively, in which it was held that one L took a life-estate only, and that a gift over on failure of male issue of L at any remote time was bad. The word malik is consistent with a life-estate, and may well be applied to a person who owns an estate for life as well as to the absolute owner. Ordinarily, without other expressions indicating in what sense the word is used, it implies absolute ownership. The words putra poutradi krame have always been understood as words of general inheritance, and, in the absence of a contrary intention being shown, would convey an absolute estate. But in construing both the word malik and the words putra poutradi krame, the expressions in the whole will must be taken together without anyone being insisted upon to the exclusion of others. Held in this case, notwithstanding the words malik and putra poutradi krame, that there being expressions excluding the succession of females and confining the succession to male heirs, and the gift over referring to the failure of male issue at any remote time, and not to the event of L's death without leaving male issue, and there being also expressions indicating an intention not to grant an absolute alienable estate, the will should be construed as giving to L only a life-estate. CHUCKKUN LAL ROY v. LALIT MOHAN ROY

In the same case on appeal to the Privy Council it was held there are two cardinal principles in the construction of wills, deeds, and other documents. The first is that clear and unambiguous dispositive words are not to be controlled or qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is that technical words, or words of known legal import, must have their legal effect, even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not use the technical terms in their proper sense. Dodd. Gallini v. Gallini, 5 B. & Ad., 621, referred to and followed. In a Hindu will an heritable and alienable estate is to be understood by the use of the words "shall become malik," unless the context indicates a different intention. The words putra poutradi krame have acquired a technical force, and are used as meaning an estate of inheritance. That a testator may have imperfectly understood the words which he has used, or the effects of conferring an hereditary estate, would not justify the giving an interpretation to his words other than their legal meaning. A will contained the following in favour of the testator's

sister's son, viz., that he "becoming my sthalabhisikto (substitute) and becoming malik of all my estate and properties shall . . . enjoy, with son, grandson and so on in succession (putra poutradi krame) the proceeds of my estate." Provisions followed for the maintenance of this nephew's widow and of this daughter, should he die; and a gift over that, "in the absence of the said nephew's son, grandson, great-grandson, and so on, then of the sons born of my sisters . . . the eldest, with son, grandson and so on in succession, shall" receive the ownership. On a claim by the nearest gotraja-apindas of the testator against the nephew for the construction of the will, — Held that on the true construction of the entire will, the prima facie legal meaning of the disposing words used was not controlled by the context, so as to establish any contrary meaning by making it clear that the words were not used in their proper sense; that there was no intention expressed to give a succession of life-estates to the nephew and his male issue only—a disposition which would not have accorded with Hindu law; but that an alienable and heritable estate was devised to him. Specified property was given by the will in trust for the income to be expended for religious and charitable purposes, with an express prohibition of alienation of this property. There was also a gift of the testator's estates to Government for charitable purposes in the event of no one entitled to be the testator's sthalabhisikto remaining alive. If expressed as to the heritable estate in which the beneficial interest accompanied the gift, the prohibition of alienation would have been merely void, without any effect upon the disposition of that estate. Made, however, as to property given for religious and charitable purposes, it was valid by Hindu law. No decision as to the effect of the gift over the secular heritable estate was required, inasmuch as the contingency upon which it was limited to go over had not occurred, and might not occur. LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY v. 66. ——— Use of words "putra poutradi krame"—Condition subsequent.—In a will, the words "putra poutradi krame," recognized as apt for conveying an estate of inheritance, do not limit the succession to male descendants and will include female heirs of a female, where by law the estate would descend to such heirs. The will of a Hindu, who died, leaving only a widow, a daughter's daughter, and a brother, directed as follows: "7. If no daughter or daughter's son of mine should be living at the time of the death of my wife, then my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) shall become the proprietress of my property, and shall remain in undisputed possession thereof. 'putra poutradi krame.'" "8. If the death of my wife should take place before my daughter's daughter arrives at majority and bears a son, then the whole of the estate shall remain in charge of the Court of Ward until she arrives at majority and bears a son." "9. If my daughter's daughter should be barren or a soulless widow, or if she should be otherwise disqualified, she shall not become entitled to my property, but shall receive an allowance of Rs300 per mensem for her life." "20. If no son or daughter should be born to me, and if my daughter's daughter should die before she bears a son, or if she should be barren or become a soulless widow, or be otherwise disqualified, then the whole of my properties shall pass into the hands of the Government." The will further directed the use of the money by the Government in that event, for certain charitable purposes. In an administration-suit brought by the Secretary of State in Council against the testator's brother, wife, and grand-daughter, for the carrying out of the trusts of the will, —Held that cl. 7, if it stood alone, would confer an absolute estate on the daughter's daughter on the death of the widow; that the disqualifications in cl. 9 must come into operation, if at all, at or before the death of the widow; and that it was unnecessary to decide whether, if they had been conditions subsequent, they would or would not have been in violation of Hindu law; that cl. 20 was supplementary to cl. 9, and that by it the gift over to the Government was to take effect, if at all, immediately upon the widow's death in the event of the grand-daughter dying before her without having borne a son, or in the event of the grand-daughter being disqualified at the date of such death. One possible event not having been provided for by the will, viz., that of the grand-daughter predeceasing the widow, having borne a son, their Lordships did not decide what would happen on the occurrence of that event. The rights of a son yet unborn would not, in the case supposed, be affected by any judgment in these proceedings. *Lady Langdale v. Meaning of, as applied to female legatees—Contingent bequest—Gift absolute—Life-estate—Succession Act (X of 1885), ss. 111 and 125—Direction against alienation.—A Hindu survivor of two brothers in a joint family under the Mitakshara law died, leaving a widow and two daughters, a brother's widow, and three daughters of his brother. In his will it was provided (inter alia) that his daughters and brothers' daughters "shall be maliks and come in possession in equal shares of all the moveable and immoveable properties." It was also provided that in the event of any of the daughters of the testator or of his brother dying childless, her share "shall devolve in equal shares on the surviving daughters, but such share shall have no connection with her husband's family." The will made a further provision that the daughters "shall not have on any account the right to sell or alienate their shares." Held (1) the expression maliks ordinarily implies an absolute gift, and there is no authority for introducing into the will the idea that a female ought not to obtain anything beyond an estate for her lifetime. (2) Having regard to s. 111 of the Indian Succession Act (applicable under the Hindu Wills Act, 1870) and the Privy Council case of Nurendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi, I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563, the provision of survivorship applied only to the case of a daughter dying during the lifetime of the testator, and did not take effect in the present case, the daughter whose share was in question having died several years after the testator's death. (3) As to the direction against alienation, s. 125 of the Indian Succession Act provides for a case like this, and the daughters receive their shares as if there was no such direction. 68. ————— "Malik."—Power to widow to adopt a son—Absolute estate.—N had two wives, one of whom died in his lifetime, leaving a daughter (the plaintiff) and K, who survived him, the mother of another daughter (the defendant). N died, having, in February 1844, made his will, which contained the following passage: "Whatever I have of moveable and immoveable property, my wife K is the malik thereof: she will pay whatever debts there exist and receive whatever dues there are receivable; and I have given commandment (permission) to my wife to adopt a son. When the adopted son attains his age, he will become the malik of the whole of my property and will perform the shrad and tarpan of my father and father's father; and in the event of any good or evil befalling the said adopted son, she will again adopt a son . . . and upon the adopted son attaining his age, he will become 'the malik' of the whole of the property." K, who survived the testator, did not adopt, but took possession of the property and remained in possession till she died in 1875; and after her death the testator's children held the properties in equal shares, with the exception of a house, which the defendant had taken sole possession of. The plaintiff brought this suit for partition, and for an account of that part of the property which had been in sole possession of the defendant. The defendant contended that her mother took an absolute estate under the will, and that she as her heir was entitled to the whole estate. Held that the use of the word "malik" as applied to the widow did not necessarily mean that she should take an absolute estate, and that the directions in the will to adopt, and that the adopted son should become malik, rather indicated an intention on the part of the testator that the widow should only take a limited estate, and that the word "malik" as applied to the widow could not therefore be interpreted as giving her a larger interest. PUNCHOOMONY DOSSEE v. B upon the death of A took possession of his properties. Upon B's death the plaintiffs, who claimed to be A's nearest of kin, brought this suit contending that the words of the will only conveyed a life-estate to his widow B, and that after her death they were entitled to A's properties. The defendant, who claimed to be B's nearest of kin, contended that the words of the will gave B an absolute estate in A's properties, and that he was entitled to the whole estate. Held that the intention of the testator was to give his widow B an absolute heritable and alienable estate in his properties. RAJNARAIN BHADOURY v. 70. ——— Testamentary bequest contained in wajib-ul-arz—Devise by a Hindu in favour of a female—Presumption as to intention of testator concerning the estate to be taken by the devisee.—One M R, a separated Hindu, died in 1882, leaving him surviving two daughters and a daughter-in-law S, the widow of a pre-deceased son. During his lifetime M R had caused to be recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of two villages, D and A, owned by him—"S, wife of my son S R, shall be regarded as owner after my death." In the wajib-ul-arz of a third village the following entry was recorded—"After my death G, the adopted son, and S, the wife of S R, shall have a right to the property." Subsequently to the death of M R, the nature of the estate taken by S in the villages D and A came before a Court of law, and S did not challenge the decree which was then passed declaring her interest to be only a life-estate. Held that, under the above circumstances, and having regard to the sentiments prevalent amongst Hindus on the subject of the devolution of immovable property upon females, the devise of the villages D and A must be taken to convey an estate for life only and not the absolute ownership in the villages. *Doorgemoney Dossee v. that "just as I am the owner so she is to be the owner," but there were no words of inheritance used, nor did he directly give his wife any power of disposition over the property. Held that she took only a life-interest in the property. The Courts have always leaned against such a construction of the will of a Hindu testator as would give to the widow unqualified control over his property. HARILAL PRANLAL v. BAI REWA

72. ——— Devise to widow—Widow's estate Stridhan.—One D, a separated sonless Hindu, made a will in favour of his wife, of which the material clause was as follows:—"After my death the said Musammatt . . . is to be the person in possession and ownership in place of me, the executant, of all the bequeathed property aforesaid by right of this will." D died, leaving a widow and a daughter who was married to one J. The widow obtained possession of the property comprised in the will on the death of D. The daughter died in the lifetime of the widow, who thereupon made a will leaving the property which had come to her from D to J. On the death of the widow, certain persons alleging themselves to be the nearest reversioners to D claimed the property. Held that on the wording of the will and having regard to the surrounding circumstances of the case, the testator having no near male heirs, and the plaintiffs, if reversioners at all, being remote reversioners, the intention of the testator D was to leave the property in question to his widow as her stridhan, to descend to her heirs. Koonjbehari Dhar v. Premchand Dutt, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 684, dissented from. Mahomed Shamsool Huda v. Sherukram, I. R., 2 I. A., 7: 14 B. L. R., 226, and Hira Bai v. Lakshmi Bai, I. L. 73. ——— Disposition in favour of a widow and an adopted son—Nature and extent of widow's interest thereunder.—By his will a Hindu testator, after providing for various bequests, dealt with the residue of his estate as follows: "My daughter-in-law and grand-daughters shall receive half of my whole estate, and my wife and my adopted son shall receive the other half." On the question as to what was the nature and extent of the interest to which the testator's widow was entitled thereunder, Held that, having regard to the rule of construction which has been repeatedly applied to gifts by Hindus in favour of their wives, the intention of the testator was not that his wife should take an absolute estate. The supposition is that a Hindu donor intends to act in accordance with the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus regarding the devolution and enjoyment of property among the members of his family. Though it was competent for the testator to provide for his wife in such a way that she should have absolute control over the property given her, that is not the provision which the Hindu law makes for a widow. The language of the will was not inconsistent with an intention on the part of the testator that the son, with his adoptive mother, should take a moiety with the incidents attaching to property held by an undivided family. Upon the true construction of the will, therefore, the widow was not intended to take any other estate than she would have taken if there had been an intestacy. SESHAYYA v. NARASAMMA I. L. R., 22 Mad., 357

74. ———— Bequest to widows—Devise of immoveable property—Life-interest—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 82—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 8—Gift over.—A Hindu testator gave a twelve-anna share of his property to his two wives by cl. 3 of his will, which was as follows: "My first and second wives shall together be entitled to twelve annas of all the properties left by me, and D and E, sons of my father's sister's son R N C, deceased, who have been living in commensality from the time of my predecessor, shall be entitled to a four-anna share in equal shares, according to the following rules." Cl. 4 was as follows: "If there should be any dispute or disagreement between my two wives, or if there being any disagreement between either or both of them and the executors abovenamed, she or they live in my family dwelling-house, or according to the rules of Hindu religion in some holy place, maintaining a good character, then each of them shall receive a monthly allowance of Rs 10 for maintenance, but if otherwise, she shall be entirely deprived of her right." Cl. 5 provided that no person of the family of the fathers of his two wives should be able to exercise any control over the money and property left by the testator. Cl. 6 provided for the education of the testator's sister's son. The gift over was to the effect that anyone acting contrary to the terms of the will should be deprived of his interest which should, in due course, devolve on the other heirs. It was found on the evidence that forfeiture under cl. 4 of the will had been incurred by the defendant B, the younger widow of the testator, by reason of her having broken the condition relating to residence. Held that s. 82 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which enacts that "where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the will that only a restricted interest was intended for him," applied to the case. Held also that the will gave only a restricted interest to the widows, and that cl. 3 of the will should be construed as giving to the widows as joint tenants a life-interest in a twelve-anna share of the estate with the right of survivorship. The clause in the will as to residence was valid and binding. Held, further, that the plaintiff, the son of testator's sister, who was in existence at the date of the testator's death, and who was the next reversionary heir after his widows, was entitled to take under the gift over, and not the heirs to the stridhan of P, the elder widow of the testator. BHONA TARINI DEBYA v. in equal shares to his younger daughters and their descendants and disposed of the rest for the benefit of his elder daughter S and her son R as follows: "All the remaining rent should be collected by S and her son R; they shall, when necessary, let the land to other tenants and have it cultivated, and R shall pay the assessment and, subject to the directions of his mother, shall enjoy the land and shall not in any way alienate the property." R predeceased S. Held that the testator's daughter took a life-estate with remainder to her son, and that on her death the property passed to the heirs of the son. SIVA RAU v. VITLA BHATTA I. L. R., 21 Mad., 425

76. ———— Gift to daughter—Absolute estate—Daughters' estate.—A Hindu by will bequeathed to his daughters his separate property to be enjoyed by them "as they pleased." Held that the daughters took an absolute estate. KAMABAZU v. VENKATARAM I. L. R., 20 Mad., 393

77. ———— Bequest to daughters—Absolute gift on condition—Meaning of the words "have issue."—The testator, after providing that his two daughters should after their marriage remain in his family, taking the income of his property without dividing it, and that, if they should disagree, the income only should be shared between them, added the following: "If both the said daughters shall have issue, they shall divide the said properties equally. Those who have no issue shall, as aforesaid, enjoy the income for their lives, and those who have issue shall enjoy the whole property." Held to be the applicable principle that where the language of a will is clear and consistent, it shall receive its literal construction unless there is something in the will itself to suggest a departure from it. Accordingly, the true construction was that the birth of issue was the event on which the absolute gift of a half share to either daughter was to take effect; and that there was no reason for construing the words "have issue" to mean "leave issue." Therefore, under the will, one of the daughters, whose only issue died before her, took a heritable share, and that share did not go over on her death to her surviving sister who had children. GURUSAMI PILLAI v. SIVAKAMI AMMAL I. L. R., 18 Mad., 347 L. R., 23 I. A., 119

78. ———— Gift to sons—Life-estate—Gift of residue—Meaning of words "have issue sons."—A Hindu died leaving a widow (N) and two sons (Damodar and Dayabhai), and a grandson K, the son of Dayabhai. Damodar had had two sons born to him in the testator's lifetime, but both had died in infancy and before the date of the will. This fact was not known at the hearing of the suit or of the appeal to any of the counsel appearing in the case, and was only disclosed after the first judgment of the Appeal Court had been delivered. By his will, dated 1885, the testator disposed of certain dwelling-houses which belonged to him and of the residue of his estate as follows: "8. I have given the houses to my wife N for her to enjoy the income thereof . . . In the event of the decease of my wife, N, my sons, Damodar and Dayabhai, may take in equal shares, half and half, the income that may be received, and may enjoy and may expend and may make donations for religious and charitable purposes, and the heirs also of both these my sons may always take the income from time to time, and may divide and take the income. To the same no one has any claim or title." "13. Afterwards giving to all what is written in this will, all the residue of the estate (iskamat), the whole of it should be divided and taken in equal shares by my sons, Damodar and Dayabhai. . . . And on the death of the two sons (kaza razae), he who may have issue sons, that issue is in every way the heir of his father's property, and if in the lifetime of the two above-mentioned sons one should not have issue sons, then, on his death, if my other son should be alive, he should get all the estate, cash and whatever else there may be, in that no son can raise a dispute. . . . As to the rest, whichever son of mine may survive (hayatime hoc) should get all that is given by me, and should there be no survivorship of that child, and should he have a son or sons, then he (or they) should get all, according to what is written above; in that no one can raise an objection." Held (confirming CANDY, J.) that under cl. 8 Damodar and Dayabhai took only a life-interest in the house as tenants-in-common, and that the ulterior interest therein, not being validly disposed of, fell into the residue. Held also (varying the decree of CANDY, J.) that Damodar and Dayabhai each took a life-estate in a moiety of the residuary estate, and that, if Damodar died without leaving a son, his moiety would devolve upon Dayabhai, or, if he were dead, upon his son K (if then living), and if Dayabhai would die without leaving a son, his moiety would devolve upon Damodar if then living. *DAMODAR DAS TAPIDAS v. 70. — Beneficial interest in surplus.—Prohibition of alienation.—A Hindu lady left by will to her sons lands belonging to her to support the daily worship of an idol, and defray the expenses of certain other religious ceremonies, with a provision that, in the event of there being a surplus after these uses had been satisfied out of the revenue of the said lands, such surplus should be applied to the support of the family. Held that this provision amounted to a bequest of the surplus to the members of the joint family for their own use and benefit, and that each of the sons of the testatrix took a share in the property, which, after satisfying the religious and ceremonial trusts, might be considerable, and could not be presumed to be valueless. Held also that directions given by the testatrix in her will to the effect that her heirs should have no power of gift or sale over the property bequeathed, and that it should not be attached or sold on account of their debts, being inconsistent with the interest actually given, were wholly beyond her power, and must be rejected

80. — Direction in will operating as gift.—Power to adopt conferred on testator's widow determined on estate resting in his son's widow—Gift of beneficial interest. The following points were ruled in construing the will of a Hindu testator: (a) a direction to make over the estate to the son when he came of age is equivalent to a gift to him to take effect at that time; (b) a provision to meet the contingency "if my son dies," in order to be consistent with an absolute gift on his attaining majority, must mean if my son dies during minority; (c) dakildar, though ordinarily meaning "occupant," must be construed in reference to the context and held to mean possessor or manager, though without beneficial interest. Held that the testator's widow took no power to adopt under the will in the event which happened, viz., of his estate having vested in his son and afterwards in the son's widow. Thayammal v. Venkatarama Aiyar, L. R., 14 I. A., 67; I. L. R., 10 Mad., 305, followed. TARACHURN CHATTERJI v. SURSH CHUNDER MOOKERJI, L. R., 16 I. A., 166

81. — Executor and residuary legatee, Powers of, to alienate when there is restriction against alienation in will.—D, residuary legatee under a will, which provided that he should not be competent to alienate the properties he took under it, having obtained an order for grant of probate in his favour, sold certain properties covered by the will to J. In execution of a decree passed against D in his personal capacity, the properties were attached, and J preferred a claim on the ground of his purchase. The claim was allowed and the properties were released from attachment. In a suit brought by the decree-holder for a declaration that the properties were liable to be sold in execution of his decree, it was held that the position of D under the will being not merely that of an executor, but that of a residuary legatee as well, and the restrictions imposed upon D by the will invalid under the ruling in Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 438; L. R., 6 I. A., 182, D had power to make the alienation in favour of J. JAGOBANDHU DRY PODDAR v. DWANIKA NATH ADDYA

82. — Devise of lands to brother to be enjoyed jointly with the testator's widow.—Power of alienation during widow's lifetime.—A testator by his will directed that his lands should be enjoyed by his brother from generation to generation and for ever, with power to alienate the same by sale, gift or otherwise, but that he should enjoy them jointly with the testator's wife. Upon its being contended that the provision in favour of the wife merely conferred upon her, or recognized, a right to maintenance and that the power of the brother to alienate was as extensive during the life of the widow

as after her death.—Held that on the true construction of the will the testator did not intend the brother to have any power of alienation during the widow's lifetime. PERITA AYAL v. NARAYANA PADAYACHI

83. — Request to widow "on account of maintenance" — Gift to widow of immoveable property—Widow's power of alienation.—A Hindu testator, leaving a grandson by adoption him surviving, besides certain moveable property, bequeathed to his wife T a house "on account of her maintenance." Held, confirming the decision of the Court below, that though it was competent to testator by apt language to clothe his widow with a power of alienation, yet in the absence of such words, regard being had to the surrounding circumstances and to the ideas which Hindus have regarding the interest ordinarily enjoyed by women in immoveable property, it must be presumed that testator only meant to bequeath a life-interest. Held also that the heir-at-law was not liable to make good moneys expended on the premises by one holding under the widow with knowledge of the contents of the will. *NUMBU MEEN v. (c) ADOPTION.

84. — Adoption directed by will—Request of property by will to the boy named for adoption by testator—Conditional gift on adoption—Conditions proposed by natural father before consenting to give his son in adoption.—G. T., a Hindu of the Bhatia caste, died on the 6th September 1867, having by his will, dated the same day, directed that, in case no son was born to him, his widow S (the plaintiff) should adopt the son of his nephew, who was to be "made his adopted son." The following was the material part of the will:—"15. During my lifetime, or subsequently to my decease, should a child (begotten) by me not be born of the womb of my wife S, then I direct and order and appoint as follows: There is my nephew D. He has now one son to whom he has not as yet given a name. My wife S is to take that son in adoption after my decease, and he is to be made my adopted son. And after what is mentioned in (this) my testamentary writing has been done accordingly, I give (him) as an inheritance all the residue of my property left at the time, and I appoint him as my heir. This I do to perpetuate (my) own name as (if he were) the son of my loins, and (he) is to pay as much respect to my wife S as (if she were) his own mother; and agreeably to her directions he is to act righteously. And my wife is to have this lad married as (though he were her) own son, and upon his marriage, Rs20,000 are to be expended out of my property. And during the lifetime of my wife, should this lad die without coming of age, then my wife is duly to take in adoption such other (or second) son of D as may be (living) at the time, and he is duly to be treated as my son. (All) are duly to act towards him, in all respects agreeably to what is written above, and he is to obey my wife S. If by the will of Providence it should so happen that there may be no other son of D, then I appoint my nephew D as the heir of my property. And to him I give as an inheritance all the residue of my property left at the time. (It is given) in the following manner." In 1870 this suit was filed by the plaintiffs (the widow and executrix of testator) for the purpose of having the will construed. The plaintiff (inter alia) complained that the defendant D had refused to give his infant son in adoption to the plaintiff, and had named him S D and had no other son. In his written statement filed in 1871, the defendant D denied that he had refused to give his said son in adoption. In a subsequent written statement filed on the 4th March 1872, he informed the Court that a second son (N) had since been born to him, and he submitted to the Court what were the rights and interest of such sons under the will. A decree was made in the suit in March 1872. In January 1878, the plaintiff presented a petition to the Court, stating that S D, having been born on the 29th April 1867, was of the age of ten years and nine months; that, according to the custom of the testator's caste, the period during which he could be adopted would terminate on his attaining the age of eleven years, viz., in April 1878; that she was ready and willing to adopt him and had offered to do so, but that his father (the first defendant) had refused to give him in adoption. She prayed (inter alia) that it might be declared that in the event of the first defendant failing to give the said S D in adoption, the first defendant and his two sons took no benefit under the said will. The first defendant filed a counter petition in which he stated that he was always willing to give his son S D to be adopted by the plaintiff on certain conditions, but that she had refused to consent to them, or to anything which would in the least interfere with her authority as a mother over the boy when adopted. He stated that the plaintiff was an adherent of a sect which held certain pernicious and immoral doctrines to which he was much opposed, and which had been abhorred by the testator; and that unless certain conditions, which he suggested, were imposed upon the plaintiff, the moral character of his son, if adopted, would be in danger of fatal injury. Held that the infant sons of the first defendant took nothing under the will unless adopted. Held also that the plaintiff was under no obligation to take the infant S D in adoption on the conditions proposed by the first defendant, his natural father. SHAMAVAROO v. DWARKADAS VASANJI. I. L. R., 12 Bom., 902

adoption ceremony is to be performed. My property, which may remain as a residue after all the things mentioned in my will have been done, I give to this lad as his inheritance, and I appoint him as my heir." A subsequent clause of the will directed as follows:—"In the twenty-eighth clause above it has been directed (that a son) should be adopted. In accordance therewith, after the said K shall have been adopted, should he die without (leaving) any descendants, then Chorn L is duly to adopt, out of my father J A's descendants, any lad who may be found fit. And if the said L should not be living at that time, then (any) lad (begotten) of the loins of my father, J A, who may appear to my executors to be fit, is duly to be appointed my heir. And to him my property as mentioned above is duly to be given in inheritance. And his adoption ceremony is to be performed. And the outlays on the occasion of his marriage also are duly to be made as written above." Held that the direction by the testator to his daughter-in-law to adopt a son was a direction to her to adopt a son to herself and her deceased husband and not to adopt a son to the testator; the former being the only adoption which she was by Hindu law competent to perform. Held also that, unless K was adopted as directed by the will, he was not entitled to the testator's property. His adoption was a condition precedent to his inheritance. KARSANDAS NATHA v. 86. ——— Gift to person as an "adopted son," though not actually so—Gift, whether conditional—Persons designata.—Where a testator recited in his will that he had been keeping a minor as his adopted son, and thereby gave properties to him absolutely, describing him as adopted son,—Held that by the true construction of the will the gift was not conditional upon adoption having been effected. SUBBARAYER v. Besides the two-anna share of the wealth in ready money and landed property which remains, you my brother will keep under your own charge; you are at present malik of the whole of the property; as master and manager of the entire property, you will perform all acts, you will cause one of your sons to be received in adoption." The brother died leaving a will, by which he committed to his wife and mother the charge of his own property and that of his brother, and also the duty of giving his son in adoption to his brother. The defendants, —viz., his wife and mother,—proved the will and took possession of the property. The plaintiff omitted to adopt. Her husband died in 1851, and the suit was brought in 1867. Held that the plaintiff, notwithstanding her omission to adopt, succeeded to her husband's estate for a Hindu widow's interest therein. Held by PEACOCK, C.J., and MARKBY, J., that the estate descended to the widow, plaintiff, subject to the two legacies; and that she did not forfeit it even if she refused to adopt. PRASANNA-MAYI DAS v. 88. ——— Double adoption—Gift to sons by implication as devisees—Intention—Persons designata.—N C G, a Hindu, died without issue, leaving a widow (the plaintiff). He left a will by which he gave a conditional power of adoption in the following words: "My wife is supposed to be pregnant with child; if her conception be true, and she be delivered of a male child, then there shall be no necessity for the adoption of children as mentioned below, but if a daughter be born, she will in that case adopt the twain mentioned below, and whatever property there shall exist consisting of moveables and immovables, etc., my executors shall divide into three equal shares, and give the same to the daughter and adopted sons on their attaining the age of majority and if a son be born and happen to die before attaining majority, in that case she shall adopt the sons of my sisters mentioned below, and for that purpose I give her, that is to say my wife, permission that she, that is my said wife, shall, in conformity with our shastras, adopt the illustrious S, the third son of B G, and O C, the youngest son of S G, an inhabitant of Autpoore—that is to say, the two sons of my two uterine sisters, in doing which there shall be no deviation. Should my wife not adopt the children after my decease, then the executors named hereinafter shall, according to this will and in pursuance of the permission given by me, cause the said two children to be received in adoption. If any of the said adopted sons depart this life before attaining the age of majority, then one of the uterine brothers of the deceased adopted son shall be received in adoption according to law in the room of deceased adopted son," etc. The plaintiff did not give birth to either son or daughter, nor did she adopt either of the persons indicated by the will. S died in 1865, and O C was living at the date of the suit and was of age. Held that, whether the two persons indicated could or could not be legally adopted as pointed out by the will according to Hindu law, there was a gift to them as devisees by implication. Doss MONAY DOSSEE v. 90. ————— Testamentary gift—Intention—Subsequently adopted son—Res judicata—Pending administration suit—Persona designata.—P, a Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta, of the Sudra caste, having two wives, M, the elder wife, and N, the younger,—but no issue by either of them, adopted two sons, the plaintiff and S. This double adoption took place on one and the same occasion, but the plaintiff went through the necessary ceremonies in point of time before S gave the plaintiff in adoption to his wife M, and S to his wife N. P afterwards died, leaving M N, the plaintiff, and S, and leaving property and a will, in which he said: "Having adopted two sons, I have given my elder son to my elder wife to bring him up, and they both are respectively nurturing the two sons, as sons born of their own womb. For the purpose of protecting and preserving the property after my decease, I appoint my elder uterine brother A executor, and my said two wives, M and N, executrices. If either of these my two sons depart this life without issue (which God forbid), I direct either of my wives whose foster son shall have died to take another son in adoption pursuant to this my direction, and having done so, should a similar misfortune happen, she shall have the option of adopting other sons in succession, and that son shall inherit the share of my deceased son. Further, besides one-half share of the moveable and immoveable properties of which I am possessed jointly with my elder uterine brother, whatever, etc., belonging to me in my separate, etc., account, my said executor and executrices shall become possessed of the whole after my decease, and shall recover my dues and pay the under-mentioned legacies, etc., etc. Afterwards, when my adopted sons shall have attained their ages of majority, my executor and executrices shall account for and give them their shares on their becoming of age. If they continue to be unanimous, well and good; if not, they may divide and receive their respective shares of the property and live separate as to food, etc., etc." The executor and two executrices proved the will. Afterwards S died an infant and unmarried, and thereupon N, his mother in adoption, assuming to act under the will, adopted the defendant O in his place, the other son, the present plaintiff, still living. The plaintiff and O afterwards, while still infants, filed a bill by their next friend against P's executor and executrices for the administration of the estate. N afterwards died before the present suit which was brought by the plaintiff against M, the surviving wife, and O, praying that the plaintiff might be declared the only son and heir of P, and that an account might be decreed against the defendants. Held by the Court below and the Court of appeal that there was a clear designation of the plaintiff and S, and of O, the subsequently-adopted son, to enable them to take under the will. Held also by both Courts that the administration suit was no bar to the present suit. And held by TRIVON, J., dissenting from the rest of the Court on the appeal, that the instrument executed by P was partly a will and partly a permission to adopt; that as to the first part of the instrument, there was sufficient designation of the persons as held by the rest of the Court; and as to the second part, that it was a condition precedent to any one taking under that permission that he should be a validly adopted son according to the Hindu law. *MOHETHANATH DAY v. 91. ————— Gift by implication—Persona designata—Power to adopt.—A Hindu testator died, leaving a widow, and leaving also a will, which contained the following clause:—"My wife is supposed to be pregnant with child; if a daughter be born, she will in that case adopt the twain mentioned below (the plaintiff and one S G); and whatever property there shall exist, consisting of moveable and immoveable, my executors shall divide into three equal shares, and give the same to the daughter and adopted sons on their attaining the age of majority." S G died; no child was borne by the widow. The plaintiff, having attained his majority, brought a suit for declaration of his title, alleging that he had been duly adopted under the will; but that, whether he had been adopted or not, he was entitled under the will to a share in the moveable and immoveable property of the testator. No valid adoption took place. Held that there was no gift by implication to the plaintiff. The testator only intended him and S G to take under the will in the event of their being adopted. Dossamony Dasser v. Prossomony Dasser, 2 Ind. Jur., N. 92. ————— Persona designata—Bequest to person not holding character supposed by testator.—Plaintiff sued as the widow of an adopted son for the property of the adoptive father, and also on the ground that the adopted son was the devisee of the adoptive father. The Civil Judge decided that the adoption of the plaintiff's husband was invalid according to Hindu law, and that the devise, having been made to the plaintiff's husband as adopted son, was invalid. Held (reversing the decision of the Civil Judge) that as the language of the testator sufficiently indicated the person who was to be the object of his bounty, the person so indicated was entitled to take, although the testator conceived him to possess a character which in point of law could not be sustained. *JAYANT BHAI v. a clear indication of the testator's intention before making an adoption to give the greater part of his property to the boy whom he was about to adopt, and the bequest was by name to the latter, who was not selected as being the adopted son, but for reasons which, though likely to lead to the adoption, were independent of it.—Held that the bequest was effectual, notwithstanding that there had been no adoption. BIBHWAR MUKERJI v. 84. ——— False designation of person in bequest—Validity of bequest.—A bequest was made to a person whom the testator falsely described as his "auram," or "naturally-born" son. This false description, not involving any condition that the legatee should be the testator's son, did not invalidate the bequest to the designated person. Famindra Deb Raskat v. Rajeswar Dass, L. 85. ——— Adopted son where adoption is invalid—Endowment—Gift to shebaita—Effect of ikarnama between widows in favour of sons whose adoption was invalid.—A testator bequeathed all his property to a family thakur, and, to secure the debaheba, directed that his two widows should each adopt a son to him, the sons to become shebaitas of the property dedicated, of which the widows, during the sons' minority, were to have control. When the two sons should have attained their majority, the two widows were, by the will, to make over to them as shebaitas all the property dedicated; and out of the surplus income, after payment of the expenses of the debaheba, the two sons were to receive a fixed allowance, the residue being undisposed of. The widows, having purported to adopt according to the will, then bound themselves by an ikarnama, each to the other, to bring up the sons as their mothers and guardians, and, after payment of the expenses for the debaheba, to divide the surplus income into two equal shares, making accumulations, which should be handed over by each to the son adopted by her on his attaining majority. In a suit by the son purported to have been adopted by the elder widow, who was then dead, against the younger widow, and the son purported to have been adopted by her, in effect for the administration of the testator's estate, with a claim for relief based on acts of the widows, including the ikarnama executed by them,—Held, first, that it being settled law that such an adoption was not valid, the plaintiff could take nothing under the will, because there was no gift to him except in the character of shebait, there having been no intention on the part of the testator, who apparently had no doubt as to the legality of his scheme to bring in a stranger as shebait. Moneemathonsath Day v. Onemathonsath Day, Bourke, 199; 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 24, distinguished.

Secondly, that by the law of inheritance the widows as heirs took the office of shebait, and became entitled to the beneficial interest in the surplus income for their estates for life, so that each of them could contract to bind her own interest. Thirdly, that there was no trust imposed upon the surviving widow independently of the contract which she had made; but that the ikarnama, taken as part of the series of acts, gave to the boys, so far as the widows' interests extended, the same benefit that they would have taken had they been heirs; and although they were not, and could not have been at their age, parties to the ikarnama, yet that they could insist on the performance of the contract, by which each widow bound herself to the other to deal with the estate in their favour. Fourthly, that each boy was entitled on attaining majority to half of the surplus income during the life of the surviving widow, and to the accumulations thereon; and accounts were accordingly directed against her. This widow, however, having died pending the appeal, after it had been argued, the testator's heir was added to the record, it resting with the plaintiff to apply to the Court below to add necessary parties. SURENDRO KESHTU ROY v. 86. ——— Restricted power to widow to adopt.—A Hindu in 1884 made a will therein described as being executed in favour of the testator's wife in which he said, "you must adopt for me a boy you like from the children that may be born in the families of my brothers," and after making certain provisions as to his property, etc., added "the principal object of this will is that you should adopt for me any suitable boy." After the testator's death, the widow, as in exercise of the power conferred on her by the will, purported to adopt a boy who did not come within the description in the first of the above clauses, although one of the testator's brothers offered his own son in adoption. In a suit by the testator's brothers for a declaration that the adoption purported to have been made by the widow was invalid,—Held that, notwithstanding the general terms of the second of the above clauses, the widow's power to adopt was restricted by the first, and the adoption purported to have been made by her was invalid. AMIRTHAYAN v. KETHARAMAYAN. I. L. R., 14 Mad., 65

87. ——— Bequest to a boy directed by the testator to be adopted by his widow—Direction for the boy's maintenance—Rights of the legatee, no adoption having been made.—A Hindu made his will whereby he provided that his property should be enjoyed by his widow, who should maintain certain persons, including the plaintiff, whom she was thereby directed to take in adoption, and added: "My aforesaid wife shall enjoy all my abovementioned properties in every way as long as she may be alive, and after her death the same shall be taken possession of by the aforesaid adopted son." The testator died, not having taken the plaintiff in adoption, and his widow did not adopt him. In a suit by the plaintiff for maintenance and for the declaration of his title under the will.—Held that all the provisions of the will relating to the plaintiff were intended by the testator to come into effect only in the event of the adoption being made, and consequently that the plaintiff had no right to the family property or to maintenance in the family. ABBU v. KUPPAMMAL . . . I. L. R., 16 Mad., 355

98. ——— Power to adopt conferred on testator's widow ended on estate vesting in his son's widow—Gift of beneficial interest.—On a claim by the children of the testator's daughter, as against his brother's son.—Held that the testator's direction to his executor (who was his elder brother) to make over whatever remained of his estate, after payment of debts, to his, the testator's, son ("when he comes of age") had the effect of a gift to that son operating at that time; and that the words in the will, "If my minor son dies," meant, in order to be consistent with the above, "dies before attaining full age." On the death of the testator's son after attaining full age and leaving a widow, the testator's widow, although empowered by the will to adopt if the testator's son should die without son or daughter (which he did), could not exercise this power after the estate had, consequently upon the son's death, vested in his widow for her widow's estate. Thayammal v. Venkataramma Aiyar, L. R., 14 I. A., 67; I. L. R., 10 Mad., 205, referred to and followed. The testator's son, having succeeded to the estate under the above provisions, himself made his will, whereby he directed that "his cousin brother" (the defendant above-mentioned), on attaining full age, "becoming dakilkar of my share as well as the share of my elder uncle," should maintain his, the testator's, mother and widow. Held that this was not an absolute gift of the beneficial interest, and that the claim of the children of the daughter of the parent testator was valid. TARACHURN CHATTERJI v. 99. ——— Right of adopted son to the corpus and surplus income during the lifetime of his adoptive mother—Direction for accumulations with proper limitation—Power of Hindu testator.—After giving authority for the adoption of a son, a testator by the ninth clause of his will, after directing certain payments to be made out of the income of the estate, proceeded as follows:—"But in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control or dominion over my estate and effect until the death of my wife; after which events, I direct my said executors and trustees to make over the whole of my estate and effects, both real and personal, moveable or immoveable whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or quality soever, to such adopted son who shall survive my wife, if he shall have attained his age of eighteen years during the lifetime of my wife, or on his so attaining such age after her decease, to whom and his heirs I give, devise, and bequeath the same." Held that the adopted son was not presently entitled to the surplus income or profits of the properties until the death of his adoptive mother, nor to have the corpus (even after provision being made for the payments mentioned in the will) of the estate made over to him. It is not incompetent for a Hindu testator, with proper limitation, to direct an accumulation of the income of property which under his will vests in his executors or trustees. In the absence of special provision, the limit must be that which determines the period during which the course or devolution of property can be directed and controlled by a testator. AMBITO LALL DUTT v. a nephew (son of a deceased brother) made a bequest for charitable purposes. The nephew, entitled either as heir or as legatee of the residue of the estate, contended that the only property of which the testator during his lifetime was in possession was joint family estate, and that under the law of the Mitakshara the testator had no power to dispose of it as he had attempted. A specific part of the testator's estate having after his death been set apart as applicable to the trust for the charitable purposes, and the nephew having received the residue, he agreed with the executors that he would act jointly with them in carrying out the trust, and became one of the trustees. Held that the property had been validly dedicated to the charitable purposes; whether or not, the will alone was sufficient, with regard to the nature of the testator's interest in the estate, to constitute the trust as against the heir. PARMANANDAS v. 108. Charitable gifts

—Void gifts—Gifts void for uncertainty.—A testator by his will directed that his executors should "get a Shiva's temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the brick-built baitakhana-house inclusive of the building and garden thereto," in which he had constantly resided. Held that the direction was not void for uncertainty, and that under the circumstances 3 per cent. of the testator's moveable estate was a proper sum to allow for the cost of erecting the temple. Held also that a direction to the executors to "perform all the acts properly and bona fide, to the best of their respective information and judgment, and according to the provisions of this will," did not give the trustees an absolute discretion to fix the amount proper to be expended on the erection of the temple. The testator further declared that "the said executors or any of" his "heirs and representatives" should "not be able to make any kind of gift, sale, or alienation, or create any incumbrance on the" said baitakhana-house, "and none of" his "heirs" should "be able to claim it in his own right; but that the "executors" should "be competent to allow" the testator's "brother, I. L. R., and his sister's son, S. D. R., to use the said baitakhana and rooms, etc." Held that this clause did not operate to dedicate the baitakhana-house to the idol Shiva, nor to vest it in the executors, but that on the death of the testator it descended to his heir-at-law, freed from any prohibition against alienation. The testator further directed that his executors should "keep in deposit Government Promissory Notes of Rs. 500 (nine and half thousand rupees) for the preservation and suitable repairs of" the baitakhana "house in proper time, and for the daily and periodical worship of the said god Shiva, for his sheba (worship) and for the repairs of the temple," the expenses of these acts to be defrayed out of interest of the Rs. 500. Held that (there having been no dedication of the baitakhana-house to the idol) the sum of Rs. 500 must be apportioned, one moiety going to the heir-

at-law, to whom the baitakhana-house had descended and the other to the executors for the repairs of the temple and the worship of the idol. The testator further declared that, "if after the performance of all the above acts there remains any money or moveable property as surplus, then the executors shall be able to spend the same in proper and just acts for the testator's benefit." Held that the direction contained in this clause was void for uncertainty. Held also that such direction did not amount to a valid precatory trust. MUSCOORIS BANK v. —Sadavarat—Well—Cistern—Preference given to unmarried daughters over married daughter.—M., a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, died in 1886, leaving him surviving his widow, and three daughters, one married and two unmarried. The testator's will contained the following provisions: CL 6. "Should my wife die without leaving an heir, then as to whatever property of mine there may be left, the same be used as follows:—My trustees shall make the outlay for both the sadavarats and that for the work of repair of my property, out of my fund. And as to whatever surplus may remain out of the same, let my trustees pay to my brother D. M.'s son, named B. R., Rs. 50 per month for his expenses. As to the surplus moneys which may remain out of the same after taking B. R.'s advice are to be used in making the outlays for building a well and avada (i.e., cistern of water for animals to drink out of). Such moneys are truly to be used by my trustees. 10. In my country, at the village of Shri Anjar, I am at present carrying on a sadavarat. Similarly, out of my fund my trustees are always to continue (the same), and if there be heirs of mine, those also are to continue the same. The sadavarat shall never be stopped. 16. After my death, my trustees shall out of my income set up a sadavarat in the town of Shri Nasik. In that sadho (articles of food) are to be given to each person as follows: Flour weighing sixty rupees. Dal (pulse) weighing eight rupees. Salt and chillies. 18. A sadavarat of mine is now going on in the village of Shri Anjar, and I have written for another sadavarat to be set up at Shri Nasik. Thus my trustees are to carry on both the sadavarats in a good manner. And they are to pay the expenses thereof out of my funds. And when my trustees shall make over my property to any of my abovementioned heirs, or to any one who may hereafter be appointed as heir, in order that the expenses of both the sadavarats may be properly defrayed out of the interest (or rents), a sum of money sufficient for that or houses, whichever my trustees may choose, i.e., property sufficient to maintain the expenses of both the sadavarats, shall be set apart. And as to the property which may remain, my trustees shall make over the same to my heir, but the sum or houses thus set apart for the expenses of the sadavarats are to be separated." Held (1) That the bequest to the sadavarat at Anjar was valid. (2) That the bequest to the second sadavarat which by cl. 16 the testator directed to be established at Nassik was valid, and was not void for uncertainty. The clear intention of the testator was that this sadavarat should be on the same scale as the one at Anjar, and there would therefore be no difficulty in ascertaining the nature of the sadavarat to be established and the sum to be expended upon it. (3) That the bequest in cl. 6 in the building of a well and cistern was valid as a charitable trust. (4) That under cl. 18 of the will the residue of the testator's property should go to the two unmarried daughters of the testator in preference to the married daughter.

Sadavarat—Request to a definite sadavarat—Request to two charitable objects, one of such bequests being invalid—Request of interest of a fund to A with invalid gift over of interest after A's death.—Where a testator by his will directed certain rents to be used "for sadavarat," and where from the wording of the will it appeared that the testator intended his executors to establish a definite sadavarat in some definite place, and not merely, at their discretion, themselves to distribute the income of the property at any indefinite place, and perhaps at many places, to Brahmins and travellers, Held that the bequest to charity was good, and an enquiry was directed as to the place at which such sadavarat should, at the proper time, be established, and a scheme for its administration was ordered to be prepared. A testator by his will directed that, if his daughters died without issue, the property of his daughters should be used by his executors for dharm and for sadavarat. Held, following Hoare v. Osborne, L. R., 1 Eq., 585, that the bequest was good to the extent of one-half in favour of the sadavarat. The gift to dharm being invalid, the other half was undisposed of. A testator by his will directed that his wife should enjoy for life the interest of a sum of Rs. 4,000 which was deposited with a certain firm, and that after her death the interest should be given to dharm. There was no residuary clause in the will. Held that the gift to dharm being clearly bad, and there being no residuary clause in the will, the corpus of the Rs. 4,000 was undisposed of and went to the testator's widow.

Gift to dharm—General and indefinite charitable bequest.—One C S died without issue on 6th January 1869, leaving two widows, C and N, who thereupon took a widow's estate in such of his immoveable property as was not validly disposed of by him. By his will, dated 5th January 1869, he appointed the defendant V and two others his executors and trustees. The two latter were dead at the date of this suit. By his will he left two immoveable properties to his wife C for life and two to his wife N, and the residue of his property he left to his trustees, directing them to apply the same in charity (dharm). The properties left to his widows were to revert on their death to the charity fund held by the said trustees. C died in 1871. N survived till 1888 and died in November of that year, leaving a will. The plaintiff was the nephew (brother's son) and heir of the testator, and he sued to have his rights in and to his uncle's estate ascertained. He contended that the bequests for dharm were void, and that the property bequeathed for that purpose was undisposed of. He claimed to be entitled to the whole of the testator's immoveable property including that which had been devised to the widows for life. Held that the devise to dharm was too general and indefinite for the Court to enforce, and was therefore void. *VUNDRAYANDAS PURSHOTAMDAS v. (A) ELECTION, DOCTRINE OF.

The doctrine of election applies to wills made in India. D, a Hindu widow, died, making a will in respect of property which she had inherited from her husband. She bequeathed Rs. 2,000 as a legacy to the plaintiff and the immoveable property to K, the defendant's father. The plaintiff and K were the heirs of her husband. The plaintiff sued for the legacy under the will, and for half the immoveable property as heir. Held that the plaintiff should be put to his election whether to take the legacy under the will, or half the property as heir of the testator's husband. *MAN-GALDAS v. 112. Inability of widow to recover property not in possession of husband.—A Hindu testator, after the death of his widow, gave a moiety of his property to his brother A, and on his death to A's two sons, B and C. A died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, and a complete division of all A's property which was held in co-parcenary was agreed upon by B and C. B also died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, and on the death of the testator's widow B's widow claimed his share. Held that B and C took A's moiety under the will as tenants-in-common, and that each of them had a vested interest in a one-fourth share, though the actual enjoyment was postponed until the death of the widow; and that the claim of B's widow was not barred by the doctrine of Hindu law that a widow succeeding as heir to her husband cannot recover property not in the possession of her husband, which doctrine was held to be inapplicable to the case of property in which the husband had a vested interest under a will or deed, though the actual enjoyment thereof was postponed during the lifetime of another. ERUM PERIAD v. RADHA BEKUT

[7 W. R., P. C., 35; 4 Moore's I. A., 157]

113. Joint tenancy—Tenancy-in-common.—"Heirs of my property," effect of these words in Hindu will.—B died in 1876, leaving H, his widow, and N, an adopted son, him surviving; and he directed by his will that H and N should be the heirs of his property. N died childless in 1880, leaving the plaintiff, L, his widow, him surviving. H thereupon took possession of all B's property claiming as a joint tenant with N under the will to be entitled by survivorship on N's death. Held that, under the will, H and N had been tenants-in-common, and not joint tenants; and that the plaintiff, therefore, as N's widow was entitled to N's share. In the expounding of Hindu wills the Court should presume that the holder did not intend to depart from the general law beyond what he explicitly declares. B, while he had constituted his widow H as one of his heirs contrary to the general principles of Hindu law, which only gave her a right to maintenance, was silent as to how far her right of heirship was to extend. The right was to be construed in a manner most consistent with the general principles of Hindu law; and to hold that a joint tenancy had been created between H and N would be in distinct derogation of the joint family system, which is the keystone of Hindu law. It would be in effect to exclude the son's family, for the benefit of the widow, in total disregard of the relations and obligations of a Hindu family. The fact of N dying childless was an accident which could not be presumed to have been in the testator's contemplation. LAKSHMIBAI v. HIRABAI

Held in the same case on appeal, affirming the decree of the lower Court, that under the will H took only a widow's estate in half the property, and that (subject to her right as a Hindu widow to a widow's estate in a half share) the entire property vested absolutely in N. On N's death, the property (subject as aforesaid) vested in the plaintiff L as his widow and heir for a widow's estate, and she became entitled to joint possession with the defendant H. A widow taking under her husband's will takes only a widow's estate in the property bequeathed to her, unless the will contains express words giving her a larger estate. HIRABAI v. LAKSHMIBAI

The recitals in the will showed that the husband was included in the gift not because of his relationship to the testator, but because he was the husband of N. Held that the grantees were joint tenants and not tenants-in-common, and that the joint tenancy was not severed by an alienation of the land by the husband to a creditor. *VEDINADA v. 115. Construction of right of transfer exercised by one of two legatees of property bequeathed equally to each—Alienation of share by widow—Severance of joint tenancy.—Where a Hindu testator bequeathed a 4-anna share of a zamindari to his youngest widow and her son, "for your maintenance," with power to them to alienate by sale or gift the property bequeathed. Held that on the true construction of such gift each of the two legatees took an absolute interest in a 2-anna share of his estate, and the words for your maintenance did not reduce the interest of either legatee to one for life only. Held also that the widow's conveyance of her share operated as a severance of a joint tenancy which had been created by the will between her and her son, and was effectual without her son's consent. *Vydnada v. 116. Deed of gift—Devises and donees.—A Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta died in 1837, leaving three sons, G, T, and M, and several daughters; he left property, moveable and immovable, and a will, dated 29th October 1836, as well as a deed of gift of even date, but executed in point of time prior to the will. By the deed of gift he gave his property as follows: To his three sons, G, T, and M, his self-acquired estate and his patrimony, i.e., his own share, agreeably to the will of his father, giving to them power of making a gift or sale, and to hold and enjoy themselves, sons, grandsons and so on in succession. His family dwelling-houses to remain in equal shares, his sons to dwell therein, but not to be able to let or sell them to any one else; then followed certain provisions with regard to a family idol, for religious observances, etc., after which the deed went on to say: "You will divide in three equal shares and receive the ready money and company's papers and bank's shares, etc., which I have; you will not be able to give in gift or sell these properties under twenty years of age; the children legitimately begotten by you will receive the same. If no son or daughter be born, or if there be no probability of its being born to any one of you (then), he will have the right and power of making a gift or sale of these. If any leave only a childless widow, then that childless widow shall have no claim or demand for any share in my real and personal property, etc., and the debsheba, and so forth. She shall not be able to make any claim on the plea of my having made a gift to her husband. Being for life under the control of my sons who may be in existence, she shall, for her food, raiment, and other expenses, get interest on Rs. 500. No gift and sale, etc., shall be made without providing for this." After which followed certain provisions for his daughters, etc. The will, after appointing one of his sons and three other persons executors, contained in its earlier clause similar provisions to those contained in the earlier part of the deed of gift; it also referred in express terms to a deed of gift. It afterwards went on to make several dispositions, among them the following: "10th section. If no issue be born to any of my sons and his wife survives him, she will enjoy and possess the share of her husband during her lifetime; she will not become vested with the right and power of making gift or sale (thereof). As long as she lives, she will live under the control and in the family of such of my sons as shall be alive; those sons will preserve the said property and maintain her. If she remain not under (their) control, then in that case she will have no concern with the said property, (but) during her life she will receive her food and raiment in consideration of her status (in life). All of the surviving sons will get that property in equal shares." "20th section. Besides the property of mine specified in this deed of gift, whatever property will (i.e., may) be acquired after the date of this my will the same shall be taken by my sons in equal shares." "23rd section. The property of which I have made a gift to my sons they shall not be competent to make a sale or gift thereof within twenty years; when there will be any grandsons in the male line, they shall get all that property; if any one of them do not have a son, (or) if there be no probability of (his) having a son at a subsequent period, he shall have power to make a sale or gift." It appeared that the testator had, at the time he executed these instruments, an intention to go on a pilgrimage to Brindaban. G and one of the other executors proved the will; the other executor died in 1844, since which time G remained in possession of the property. T died about 1858 without issue, and his widow B sued the surviving brothers G and M for her husband's share in the estate. This suit they compromised by a payment to B. G and M afterwards and within twenty years had issue sons and daughters. In a suit to have the will and deed construed, it was held that, although the deed was not produced when probate of the will was taken out, it was sufficiently proved before the Court in the present suit to allow its being acted on; that the provisions in the will controlled the inconsistent provisions in the deed of gift; that consequently the son's childless widow took her husband's share for life; that the sons having male issue took only a life-interest; that the grandsons during the lifetime of their fathers took nothing, but after the death of their father respectively took among them equally their father's share, the share of each son going to his own son or sons only, and not to grandsons of the testator generally. The restriction on alienation extended to both the moveable and immoveable property. Held also that the widow of T, having received a sum of money from M and G in lieu of T's share, that share went to M and G in equal shares for life, and on the death of either of them his share would go to his own sons absolutely. SATCOWRIE SEIN v. GOVIND CHANDER SEIN. 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 56

117. Gift of estate subject to widow's vested interest—Curtailed enjoyment.—V S, a Hindu, died in 1858, leaving a will whereby he appointed G and S his executors to conduct his affairs as directed in the will. After payment of debts, legacies, etc., G and S were directed to manage the residue of estate and not to sell it during the lifetime of L, the junior wife of V S, to whom a monthly payment for life was to be made by them; after the death of L, G and S were directed to divide the property that remained in equal shares between them and to continue to enjoy the same in equal shares. L survived both G and S, who died in 1875 and 1879 respectively. Held—in a suit brought in 1879 by the divided nephew of V S, against L and the representatives of G and S, to have his right to the estate of the testator, upon the death of L, declared and for an account—that there was no intestacy, and that the gift to G and S did not fail by reason of their deaths in the lifetime of L, but that G and S took a vested interest on the death of V S. *KOLLA SUBRAMAMAIN CHETTI v. 118. Fund set apart by will for payment of monthly allowances proving insufficient—Right to supply deficiency from the general estate—Interest chargeable on property of a testator deposited with a firm.—C, a separated Hindu, died in 1874 possessed of a half share in two dwelling-houses, one situated in Bombay and the other in Kathiawar. He was also possessed of considerable moveable property. He left him surviving two widows and one daughter named J. By cl. 2 of his will, dated 4th July 1874, he directed, as to his share in the houses, that his wives should have a right to reside therein as long as they might live, and, in the event of their decease, that his nephew B, the son of his brother V, should be the owner; and should the decease of B take place, then whoever might be the son of V should be the owner. By a subsequent clause (the 10th) of his will the testator declared that, should the decease of his two wives take place, all his immoveable and moveable property should go to his nephews B and M, the sons of V.

B and M both died in the lifetime of C's two widows. M died first, childless and unmarried. B left a widow him surviving, who claimed that under cl. 2 B took a vested estate in the testator's share in the two houses, which on his death devolved upon her, and that under cl. 16 B and M took a vested estate in joint tenancy; that on M's death his interest survived to B, and on his death devolved upon his widow. It was contended on behalf of the two widows of C, the testator, that the gift to B by cl. 2 and to B and M by cl. 16 was contingent, and had lapsed by their deaths; that the result was an intestacy so far as regards the property in question; that they consequently took a widow's estate in the immovable property for their lives; and that upon their death the property should go to the testator's daughter J; and that, as to the moveables, they took absolutely. Held that under cl. 2 B took on the death of the testator not a contingent, but a vested estate in perpetuity, which on his death devolved on his widow; and that under cl. 16 B and M took a vested interest in joint tenancy in the whole of the residuary estate; that on the death of M, the survivor B took the whole absolutely, and on his death his interest was transmitted to his widow. Held also that the interest taken by B under the above clauses of the will was subject to the right of the testator's widows to reside in the houses, and to have their monthly allowances paid out of the moveable estate, and was subject also to the bequests, charitable and otherwise, contained in the will. By cls. 15 and 16 of his will the testator directed that certain monthly allowances should be paid to each of his widows out of the interest of certain Government promissory loan notes which were to be purchased by his trustees. Held that, if the particular sources of income, out of which the testator directed these allowances to be paid, should prove insufficient, the rest of the moveable property, or the income derivable from it, as well as the rents of the immovable property, should contribute. The funds belonging to the testator's estate had, in accordance with the directions in his will, been kept in the firm of Viram Mowji, in which the testator had been a partner. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the firm should be charged interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. JAIRAM NARBONJI v. KURBANJI. I. L. R., 9 Bom., 491

119. — Executor, Estate of—Administrator, Suit by—Trustees—Notice—Charitable Trust—Parties.—B K, a Hindu, by his will, executed in Bombay and dated 6th January 1802, bequeathed a house to his wife R for her life in trust to allow the impersonations of Valabh to reside in it, and appointed four executors by name, but made no gift over of the house to those executors or to any one else. The will was proved by the four executors on 24th September 1808. On 23rd June 1820, R, claiming as executrix according to the tenor, obtained an order granting probate to her as well as to the executors expressly appointed. The executors retired, and R acted alone in the management of the testator's estate. On 4th September

1862, R sold the house for its full value to the defendant, who had notice of the charitable trust affecting it. R died on 23rd March 1870. On 17th March 1871, the High Court, on the application of one A T, revoked the probate of B K's will granted to R, but without prejudice to any act done in due course of administration by R, and granted letters of administration cum testamento annexo and de bonis non of B K to A T. On 13th July 1878 A T died. On 1st May 1875 the plaintiff, who was the only son and heir of A T, instituted the present suit for the purpose of recovering from the defendant possession of the trust premises sold to him by R. The plaintiff was also one of the surviving heirs of B K, and, by virtue of a release executed to him by the other heirs, was the sole surviving heir who had any beneficial interest in B K's estate. The plaintiff, however, did not claim the house in the possession of the defendant as the beneficial owner, but to hold it for the purpose of giving effect to the trust created by the will of B K. On 28th January 1876 the plaintiff obtained letters of administration cum testamento annexo and de bonis non of B K, and it was on these letters that he now based his claim. Held, 1st, that the plaintiff had no ground of action as administrator of B K. Held, 2ndly, that independently of the provisions of the Succession Act and the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, which were not applicable to the case, the executors of a Hindu do not, in the character merely of executors, take any estate, properly so called, in the property of the deceased. That accordingly on the death of R, the devisee for life in trust, there being no gift of the premises to the executors named in the will, the ownership in the premises would devolve upon the surviving heirs of the testator subject to the trust, and such heirs would accordingly be trustees under or by reason of the will of their ancestor, though succeeding to the property in their character of heirs. That the trusteeship thus vesting in all the surviving heirs, the release, though operative to pass the legal estate, so as to vest it in the plaintiff alone, could not vest the trusteeship in him alone, and that accordingly the plaintiff could not maintain this suit unless joined by the other heirs of B K. Held, 3rdly, that even if the other heirs of B K had joined as plaintiff, still the suit, being one by trustees to disaffirm the completed act of a predecessor against the person claiming by virtue of such act, would not lie. Semble—That as it appeared that the impersonations of Valabh never had availed themselves, and never were likely to avail themselves, of the house, the sale of it by R to the defendant was not a breach of trust. MANIKLAL ATMARAM v. MANCHERJI DINKHAI. I. L. R., 1 Bom., 269

120. — Construction of will—Executor's interest.—By the first clause of the will of a Hindu the testator devised all his real and personal estate to his five sons. By a subsequent clause the testator provided as follows: "But should peradventure any among my said five sons die not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's son, in that event neither his widow, nor his daughter, nor his daughter's son, nor any of them, will get any share out of the share that he has obtained of the immovables and moveables of my said estate. In that event, of the said property, such of my sons and my sons' sons as shall then be alive, they will receive that wealth according to their respective shares. If any one acts repugnant to this, it is inadmissible. However, if my sonless son shall leave a widow, in that event she will only receive Company's rupees ten thousand for her food and raiment." Held, firstly, that by the words "not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's son," the testator meant not an indefinite failure of male issue, but a failure of male issue of any of his sons at the time of the death of that son. Secondly, that there is nothing in such a devise by a Hindu against public convenience, or generally mischievous or against the general principles of Hindu law. SOORJEMONEY DASSE v. DEBOBUNDO MULLICK

121. ———— Bequest by a Hindu to his wife—Life estate—Reversioner—Vested remainder—Contingent bequest.—One J N died in 1876, leaving a will which, after stating his property in detail, provided as follows: "When I die, my wife named S is owner of that property. And my wife has powers to do in the same way as I have absolute powers to do when I am present. And in case of my wife's death, my daughter M is owner of the said property after that (death)." Held that S took only a life-estate under the will with remainder over to M after her death. Held also that the bequest to M was not contingent on her surviving S, but that she took a vested remainder which upon her death passed to her heirs. LALLU v. JAGMOHAN

122. ———— Vested remainder—Words "malak and waras."—A Hindu died, leaving a will which provided (inter alia) as follows: "After my death, my wife, if she be alive, is the rightful heir, and if she be not alive, and after the death of my wife, my daughter N is my rightful heir (hakdar)." . . . "As to my daughter N, whom I have, after the lifetime of myself and of my wife, appointed heir to my property, and as to the surplus the heir to the same is my daughter N." The testator died in 1894, N in 1895, and the wife in 1897. Thereupon the testator's step-mother claimed the property as his reversionary heir. Held that under the will N took an estate vested in interest from the testator's death, which would pass to her heirs on her death, and the step-mother would have no title. There is no real difference in the meaning of the words "waras" (heirs) and "malak" (owner). Lallu v. Jagmohan, L. L. R., 22 Bom., 409, followed. CHUNILAL v. BAI MULI L. L. R., 24 Bom., 420

(J) ACCUMULATION.

123. ———— Direction to accumulate income—Omission to create beneficial interest.—Per TREVELYAN, J.—A Hindu testator cannot direct the accumulation of the income of his estate for an indefinite period, if there is no beneficial interest created; in the property in order to render the gift, whether under the will or inter vivos, valid. AMRITO LALL DUTT v. SURNOMONI DAS

124. ———— Direction to live jointly.—The meaning of the testator is to be ascertained by the words which he has made use of, having regard to the laws which prevail in India relative to these subjects. A testator directed his sons, using the words "living jointly in respect of food," to take care of and look after his property, moveable and immovable, and carry on his trading business. Held that this interest is not accurately represented by the words "joint estate" in England, nor is it analogous to the case of a testator in England who gives property to executors for the purpose of carrying on his trade, but is more analogous to the tenancy in common which prevails in England. The will also directed that on the death of a son, if that son died leaving a son, the share of that son was to go to that son's son, and if the son dying left no son, that the share should go to the survivors. Held that the share of profits made during the joint lives of the sons, which belonged to the deceased son, goes over to the other sons of the testator as they would go according to law, as from a consideration of the various terms of the will itself there was an absence of all directions on the part of the testator to accumulate the profits, or to dispose of the profits which were the property of the son. FRANKISTO CHUNDER v. BAMA-SOONDREY DOSSEH . . . 9 W. R., P. C., 1

125. ———— Contingent remainders—Executory devise.—There is nothing in the general principles of Hindu law, or public convenience, to prevent a Hindu testator devising self-acquired property by way of remainder, or executory devise, upon an event which is to happen on the close of a life in being. The will of a Hindu testator, after devising all his real and personal estate among his five sons (a joint undivided family), contained this clause: "Should any among my said five sons die, not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's son, in that event neither his widow, nor his daughter, nor his daughter's son, nor any of them, will get any share out of the share that he has obtained of the immovables and moveables of my said estate: in that event, of the said property, such of my sons and my sons' sons as shall then be alive, they will receive that wealth according to their respective shares. If any one acts repugnant to this, it is inadmissible. However, if any sonless son shall leave a widow, in that event she will only receive Rs10,000 for her food and raiment." The family remained joint. S, one of the sons, died after the testator's death without issue male, but leaving a widow his heiress-at-law. Held that, by the words "not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's son," the testator meant not an indefinite failure of male issue, but a failure of male issue of any one of his sons at the time of the death of that son. Held, further, (1) that upon the death of S without male issue, his interest in the capital of the estate determined, and that his widow became entitled to hold and enjoy as a Hindu widow a fifth part of the accumulations from the testator's estate from the time of his death to the death of his son S; and (2) that she was also entitled absolutely in her own right to the interest and accumulations which had since S's death arisen from such fifth part of the accumulations. By the decree S's widow was declared entitled to the Rs10,000 given by the will with the benefit of a residence in the family dwelling-house, and participations in the means of worship. The question of the amount of her maintenance as a Hindu widow was left open by the Judicial Committee, as that point could be raised on further directions after taking the accounts. SOORJEMONEY DASSER v. DEBOBUNDOO MULLICK

[9 Moore's I. A., 129]

(b) PERPETUITIES, TRUSTS, BEQUESTS TO A CLASS, AND REMOTENESS.

126. ——— Perpetuities—Trusts—Absence of disposition of beneficiary interest.—A Hindu by will attempted to create a trust for the accumulation for 99 years of the surplus income (after certain yearly payments) of his estate in the purchase of zamindari, etc., from time to time, and empowered his trustees to continue such trust after the expiration of the 99 years' term. The will contained no disposition of the beneficial interest in the zamindari so to be purchased. Held that such trust was void. Seemle—Perpetuity (save in the case of religious and charitable endowments) is not sanctioned by Hindu law. ASIMA KRISHNA DEB v. KUMARA KRISHNA DEB. . . . 3 B. L. R., O. C., 11

127. ——— Trusts.—A Hindu by his will left all his property "in full and absolute right, property, and ownership" (nevertheless upon the conditions and trusts, and with the intent and for the purposes thereafter described), to certain persons named, and "to their successors in the trusts of the settlement thereafter provided," declaring the "trusts and objects" of his said will and settlement, and the methods, plans, and acts "he desired "to be performed and observed" by such persons and their successors in the trusts. He then desired that all his property should be preserved and held for ever under the trusts, and for the purposes of the said will and settlement. In the second, third, and fourth clauses of the will, the testator went on to direct the "executors and trustees" to pay to his sons therein named a certain monthly sum, "such payment to be continued after his decease to his children and descendants per stirpes." After directing the executors and trustees to make other payments, etc., in the eighteenth clause he directed: "With respect to accumulations of money in the hands of the executors and trustees, I direct that the same be converted into such Government or other security as to the executors and trustees may seem best, and that the interest and produce of such security be accumulated and in like manner be invested, and that, when and so soon as the aggregate thereof shall amount to Rs8,00,000, it is to be transferred to, and divided among, my sons or the survivors, or survivor, together with the descendants of such of them as may be deceased, per stirpes; and as soon as new accumulations arise in the hands of the executors and trustees, that the same be again in like manner divided among my sons then living, or the survivor of their descendants, as before, and so on from time to time." In the twenty-first clause the testator made provision for the appointment of new "executors and trustees," "as it is my intent and desire that the disposition, the conditions, and control I am now devising in regard to the future arrangement and enjoyment of my property be perpetuated." In the Court below,—Held per MARKBY, J., that trusts cannot be created by Hindus, but a testator may burden his heir or devisees with a payment of a simple sum of money to a specified person (including an idol) in existence at the death of the testator. Such bequest cannot be held good as a trust created for the benefit of the legatee, but may be treated as creating an ordinary obligation for the payment of money. On appeal,—Held per PRACOCK, C.J., that trusts have been and can be enforced against Hindus; the trustees in this case take upon such trusts as are valid; so far as they are invalid, the heirs are entitled to the beneficial interest. A Hindu cannot by his will do indirectly by intervention of trusts what he cannot do directly. Per MACPHERSON, J.—Both by Hindu law and the practice which has always prevailed in the Courts in India and in the Privy Council, a Hindu may legally deal with his property so as to create a trust or relation in many respects similar to, although not necessarily identical with, that known in English law as the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. Even if trusts are not expressly recognized by the old Hindu law, there is nothing in it forbidding them, or repugnant to them, or inconsistent with their existence. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the general scheme of the will failed, because the trusts were intended for an illegal purpose, namely, for the purpose of creating a perpetuity. Per PRACOCK, C.J.—The eighteenth clause is repugnant and void, also bad, because the persons to take were unborn at the time of the testator's death, and on the ground of uncertainty, it being impossible to ascertain at the testator's death who would be entitled to participate in the several divisions of accumulation directed to be made. As to the bequests in the second, third, and fourth clauses of the will,—Held in the Court below per MARKBY, J., that they could only operate in favour of specified persons in existence at the death of the testator. On appeal,—Held per PRACOCK, C.J., that they operated as "gifts to the sons for life, with remainders to such children of the sons as were in existence at the time of the death of the testator per stirpes." Per MACPHERSON, J.—There was a good gift in remainder to the children of such sons as were alive at the time of the testator's death. It is not a violation of the principles of Hindu law to support estates which are to vest on the expiry of a life in being, in a case like the present, where the testator has given his property to trustees who have accepted it and are prepared to carry out his wishes. Their acceptance would be sufficient if any is necessary. KRISHNARAMANI DAS v. ANANDA KRISHNA BOSE, ANANDA KRISHNA BOSE v. RAJENDRA NARAYAN DEB

129. — Estates-tail—Gifts inter vivos—Discretion.—P K T died leaving an only son, G M. By his will after reciting, "I have already made such provision for my son G M as I consider sufficient, and he will take nothing whatever under this my will," he devised and bequeathed all his property, both real and personal, unto and to the use of R N, U M, J M, and D P M (hereafter called the trustees), their heirs, executors, etc., according to the nature and tenure of the property to have and to hold upon the trusts hereinafter declared, that is to say, as regards personalty, upon trust to collect and get in the same and thereout to pay his funeral expenses and debts and such legacies as might be payable in the ordinary course of administration within one year from the testator's death; after paying the funeral expenses, debts, and legacies, upon trust to sell and convert into money such portion of the personal estate as should remain unexpended, and not consist of money or security for money, and to vest the proceeds on good securities; and out of the annual income of the whole upon trust to pay the annuities given by the will and also any of the legacies so far as it would suffice, and after payment of the legacies and annuities to pay the surplus unexpended unto the person or persons for the time being entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the real property, or of the rents and profits or surplus rents and profits thereof; and as soon as all the annuities and legacies should have fallen in and been fully paid and satisfied, in trust absolutely for the person or persons entitled to the beneficial or absolute enjoyment of the real property. As regards realty, upon trust, until all the debts and legacies had been paid and all the annuities had fallen in and been fully satisfied, to receive and collect the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and thereout in the first instance to pay such (if any) of the legacies and annuities as the personal estate or income derived from the trust-money and securities should be inadequate to defray, and to pay the residue to the person or persons for the time being to whom the real estate is devised, for the absolute use of such person or persons respectively. The testator then desired the trustees to hold the real estate generally for the use and benefit of such last-mentioned person or persons for the time being so far as was consistent with the trusts and provisions of the will; and further, he directed that out of the net annual income the person entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the real property or of the income or surplus income thereof should receive for his own use every year, Rs. 500 a month or Rs. 6,000 a year, and that the various legacies and annuities should only be paid gradually and as found possible by the trustees out of the balance remaining out of the last-mentioned payment; and as soon as all the legacies and annuities had fallen in or been paid or fully satisfied, then in trust forthwith to convey the real estate unto and to the use of the person entitled to the beneficial interest therein with and subject to such and the like limitations, provisions, and directions thereafter contained and expressed of and concerning "the real estate," so far as the then condition of circumstances will permit, and so far as such limitations and directions can be introduced into any deed of conveyance or settlement without infringing upon or violating any law against perpetuities which may then be in force and apply to the real estate or the conveyance or settlement of it as last aforesaid (if any such law there be). The testator then desired that all the gifts, devises, and limitations in his will hereinafter contained should be read and taken as subject to the devise and bequest thereinbefore made to the trustees and the various provisions and declarations made by him with reference thereto. The testator devised all his real property (subject to the before-mentioned devise to the trustees) "unto and to the use of J M for the term of his natural life, and from and after the determination of that estate, to the use of the eldest son of J M born during the testator's life for the life of such eldest son; and after the determination of that estate, to the use of the first and other sons successively of the eldest son of J M according to their respective seniorities, and the heirs male of their respective bodies issuing successively; and upon the failure or determination of that estate, to the use of the second and other sons of J M born during the testator's life, successively, according to their respective seniorities; and upon the failure or determination of that estate, to the use of the first and other sons successively of such second or other sons of J M, and the heirs male of their respective bodies issuing, so that the elder of the sons of J M, born in the testator's lifetime, and his first and other sons successively, and the heirs male of their respective bodies issuing, may be preferred to and taken before the younger of the sons of J M born in the testator's lifetime, and his and their respective first and other sons successively, and the heirs male of their respective bodies issuing. And after the failure or determination of the uses and estates thereinbefore limited, to the use of each of the sons of J M who should be born after the testator's death successively according to their respective seniorities, and the heirs male of their respective bodies issuing, so that the elder of such sons and the heirs male of his body may be preferred to and taken before the younger of such sons and the heirs male of their and his respective bodies issuing." On failure of these estates there were similar limitations to other members of the testator's family and their sons, sons' sons, etc. Further, the testator declared his will and intention to be "to settle and dispose of the estate in manner aforesaid as fully and completely as a Hindu born and resident in Bengal may give or control the inheritance of his estate, or a Hindu purchaser may regulate the conveyance or descent of property purchased or acquired by him, and not subject to any law or custom of England, whereby an entail may be barred, affected, or destroyed; provided always, and I hereby declare, that if any devise or tenant-for-life, or in tail, or otherwise, or any person entitled to take as heir by descent or adoption or otherwise in any manner, under the limitations hereinbefore contained, shall permit or suffer the property so devised, etc., to be sold for arrears of Government revenue, etc., then and immediately thereupon the devise and limitations in this my will declared and contained shall wholly cease and determine as to him," etc. Finally, he appointed the trustees executors of his will. J M had no son born during the life of the testator. G M, the son of the testator, sued to have the will set aside, except as regards the payment of debts, legacies, and annuities. He also charged the executors with waste and asked for an account. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the devise was not void, merely upon the ground that the estates were devised upon trust, and that the testator had power to create by means of a devise to trustees such estates and beneficial interest as he could have created without the intervention of trustees. But the entails intended to be created by the will were void, estates-tail being wholly opposed to the general principles of Hindu law. The plaintiff could not claim maintenance, sufficient provision having been previously made for him by his father. Held in the Court below that, although the testator could not create an estate-tail, yet as it is clear that he intended to dispose of the whole inheritance, the devise must be construed as amounting to the creation of several successive life-interests, each commencing on the termination or the failure of the preceding, the whole completed by the gift of the entire estate of inheritance to take effect on the expiration of the last life-interest. The first series of such devises is not bad for remoteness, for there is nothing in Hindu law to prevent a testator from making a gift of property to an unborn person, provided the gift is limited to take effect, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being; therefore, as concerns only the succession of gifts for life only to J M and his sons, terminated by the absolute gift of the inheritance to an unborn person, the will is unimpeachable, because each of these gifts must take effect, if at all, at or before the close of a life in being; and the like conclusion would hold with regard to each of the other series of devises taken alone; but taken in the aggregate they may violate the rule against perpetuities; but the first series could not be affected by this, and therefore, as long as it stands, the plaintiff has no claim to a decision of the Court upon the validity of a devise which is subsequent in order of time. The plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. He is not entitled to immediate relief of any kind. Held on appeal that the devise to J M was valid, though it created only a life-estate. The intention of the testator was that J M should take an immediate vested beneficial interest in the real estate, subject to the charges for payment of legacies, annuities, etc., and in the Rs. 500 a month. The devise to J M was not bad for uncertainty. But the devises of estates-tail must be rejected as void, and cannot be converted by the Court into devises creating larger estates than the testator intended. The words of the devise cannot be construed to pass a general and absolute estate. As J M had no sons born in the lifetime of the testator, the devise to the use of the first and other sons successively of the eldest son of J M lapsed. By Hindu law a gift cannot operate to pass property unless the donee is in existence, so that, as soon as the property is relinquished and passes out of the donor, it may vest in the donee. That in the case of a will would be at the time of the death of the testator, from which moment the will operates as a relinquishment (except in the case of a posthumous child of the testator or a son adopted by the widow of a testator). Therefore the devises to the sons of J M to be born or adopted after the death of the testator are not valid according to Hindu law. The gift to trustees does not cure the invalidity, for the law will not permit that to be done indirectly which cannot be lawfully done directly. The gift of the personality fails because of the want of certainty at the time of the death of the testator, who would be the donee, and whether the donee was a person in existence or not. The gift over of the corpus of the personality after the payment of the legacies and annuities was bad, and consequently the property in it is vested in the son and heir of the testator subsequently to the trusts for the payment of debts, legacies, and annuities, etc. But the right to receive the surplus rents and profits of the real estate and of the interest and dividends of the personality, if there be any, is vested in J M for life, or until the time arrives for the conveying of the real estates, and the vesting of the corpus of the personality. The heir-at-law cannot be disinherited by words expressing that he is not to take any benefit under the will. He will take by descent, by his right of inheritance, whatever is not validly disposed of by the will. Subject to the trusts for payment of the funeral and testamentary expenses and of the debts, legacies, and annuities, the plaintiff, as the heir-at-law of the testator, is entitled (notwithstanding the will) to a general estate of inheritance in reversion to the immoveable property of the testator, and by the terms of the will no estate, larger than an estate for life, has been validly created, and there is a resulting trust in the plaintiff's favour. The plaintiff is not entitled to a declaratory decree against the unborn sons of J M, or the subsequent unborn devisees. The plaintiff is entitled to have the question of waste tried. He is also entitled to have an account of the moneys and securities which have come into the hands of the trustees, and to see how they have been applied. GANENDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. Held by the Privy Council on appeal. In construing transfers by gift among Hindus, a benignant construction is to be used, and the donor's intentions carried out, if ascertainable, to the extent and in the form which the law allows. Thus if an estate be given by a Hindu to A without words of inheritance, it will, in the absence of a conflicting context, give an estate inheritable as the law directs; if to it be added an imperfect description of it as a gift of inheritance not excluding the inheritance imposed by law, an estate of inheritance would pass; if a gift be in terms of an estate inheritable according to law, with superadded words restricting the power of transfer which the law annexes to that estate, the restriction is to be rejected; if a gift be to A and his heirs to be elected from a line other than that specified by law and, expressly excluding the legal course of inheritance, the gift is only good so far as consistent with the law—A would take a life-estate, and the other limitations would fail. All estates of inheritance created by gift or will, so far as they are inconsistent with the general law of inheritance, are void as such, and by Hindu law no person can succeed as heir to estates described in terms which in English law would designate estates-tail. In order to make a gift under a will good by Hindu law, the donee, except in the case of an adopted child, or a child en ventre sa mere, must be a person in existence, capable of taking at the time when the gift takes effect. A child adopted after a man's death in pursuance of a power given by him is in contemplation of law begotten by that man. The law of wills among Hindus is analogous to the law of gifts; and even if wills are not universally to be regarded in all respects as gifts to take effect upon death, they are generally so to be regarded as to the property which they can transfer, and the persons to whom it can be transferred. A person capable of taking under a will must be such a person as could take a gift inter vivos, and therefore must, either in fact or in contemplation of law, be in existence at the death of the testator. Soorjamonny Deoss v. Denobundoo Mullick, 9 Moore's I. A., 123, distinguished. Trusts are not unknown to Hindu law; they can be created for carrying out such intentions as the law recognizes. There is no reason why a Hindu should not by will create an estate for life. Where the testator left his property to A for life with remainders, showing that A should have no more than a life-estate, but that the testator wished to tie up the estate by provisions in tail,—Held A could not be declared entitled to more than a life-estate. Where a testator directed his property to go in a certain way on the "failure or determination" of estates created by him, it was held that such words contemplated the fact of those estates being legal and valid; and that, as they were illegal and invalid, no effect could be given to the directions as to the further devolution of the property. The will directed that, as to the personality, the trustees were, after all annuities and legacies had fallen in and been satisfied, to stand possessed of, and interested in, the corpus in trust absolutely for the person or persons entitled under the limitations in the will to the beneficial or absolute enjoyment of the real property. The High Court gave the tenant for life the surplus of the interest remaining in the hands of the trustees after payment of the legacies and annuities, but excluded him from any right to the subsequently accruing interest. Held that he was entitled to the interest of the personality after such falling-in and satisfaction. Where a son had received as a gift from his father property producing at the time Rs7,000 a year, their Lordships, without deciding, whether a son could be deprived of maintenance, considered that he had received an adequate maintenance. All the existing parties interested in a will being before the Court, a decree can be made as to the rights of all parties. *Lady Langdale v. 129. — Bequest to a class—Vested and contingent interest.—A will made by a Hindu contained the following clause: "I bequeath to my elder daughter Rs25,000, subject to the condition that she shall invest the same in lands . . . shall enjoy the produce . . . and shall transmit the corpus intact to her male descendants." Within a month after the testator's death his eldest daughter was delivered of a son, who died in a few months. She died subsequently leaving the plaintiff, her husband, but no male issue her surviving. The plaintiff sued as heir of his son to recover the amount of the above bequest. Held that, as the daughter's son never acquired a vested interest in the bequest, the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. SRINIVASA v. 130. — Void residuary bequests—Trusts for maintenance and religious trusts—Perpetuities.—A testator by his will directed as follows: "To my daughter A B I give the interest on a Government promissory note for Rs3,000, to be paid to her, as the same becomes due, during her life and if at her death there be any male issue of hers living, I give the said promissory note, to be divided equally among them if more than one, and if there be no such male issue living at the death of the said A B, the said security for Rs3,000 shall thereupon fall into the general residue of my estate." He also directed, after having bequeathed five, "one-sixth share thereof be retained by my executors, and the income thereof accumulated and invested in Government securities until the son or sons of my eldest son H, if he shall have any son, shall attain full age, and shall thereupon be paid to such son or sons if more than one, in equal shares . . . and in case no son be born of my said eldest son, or no son shall attain full age, then such one-sixth share shall, on the death of the said H, be divided equally among such of my five other sons as shall then be living and the male issue of such of them as shall then be dead, such male issue taking the share of their respective fathers." Then after reciting that he was desirous of making, out of his immovable property, a permanent provision for the benefit of his five younger sons and their male descendants, and that he was desirous of having the due forms of worship carried out after his death, he further directed that certain lands should be held by his executors on trust, to apply the rents and profits (1) in the celebration of certain poojas and in the performance of periodical turns of worship of the family thakours and other religious festivals, at the same expense and in the same style as the testator himself had done, or at such expense and in such style as the executors should think fit; and (2) in the maintenance out of the surplus of the five younger sons, their wives, sons, and male descendants, and female descendants until their marriage. Held that the bequests to the children of the daughter and to the children of H were void.

Remoteness—Applicability of English rules to Hindu wills.—A Hindu testator died in 1837, leaving four sons and two grandsons by a deceased son. By his will, dated in 1837, after directing that his property should be divided into five shares, of which his four sons were to take one each, and his two grandsons the remaining one, the testator made the following devise: "On the death of any or either of my said four sons, or of the said R D and M D (his grandsons) leaving lawful male issue, such male issue shall succeed to the capital or principal of the share, or respective shares, of his or their deceased father or fathers, to be paid or transferred to them respectively on attaining the full age of 21 years; but if any or either of my said four sons shall die without leaving any male issue, or if he or they shall die leaving such male issue, and the whole of such issue shall afterwards die under the age of 21 years, and without male issue, in such case the share or shares of my said sons so dying shall go to and belong to the survivors of my said sons and my said two grandsons for life and their respective male issue absolutely after their deaths in the same manner and proportion as is hereinbefore described respecting their original shares." U, one of the sons, died in 1858, leaving an only son S, born in the lifetime of the testator, who died shortly after his father intestate, and without male issue. In a suit by the widow of S claiming as his heir and representative to recover the share of U as having descended to S absolutely, and to obtain partition,—Held that, inasmuch as U survived the testator, the gift to the male issue of the testator's sons was void for remoteness as including objects who might have come into existence after the testator's death, and therefore be incapable of taking. The rule that where there is a gift to a class, and some persons constituting that class cannot take in consequence of remoteness, the whole bequest must fail, as well as the principle of the English Courts in deciding questions of remoteness, that regard is to be had to possible and not to actual events, is applicable to the interpretation of the wills of Hindus. The gift to the male issue being void, the subsequent limitations were also void. S therefore, and through him the plaintiff, was entitled to a share in such part of the testator's estate as by reason of the invalidity of the gifts in his will was undisposed of.

Gift to sons or daughters of M who may be alive at M's death—Gift to a class to be ascertained at future time—One member of such class in existence at testator's death—Tagore case—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 5—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 98.—P, a Hindu, died in September 1886, and left two sons, viz., the plaintiff and one M. By his will P left the residue of his property to trustees, who were to invest it in Government promissory notes and to pay the interest thereof to the wife of his son M and after her death to pay it to M. He further directed that after M's death "the amount of the interest is to be paid from time to time to his sons or daughters who may be alive according to what may be considered proper." By a subsequent clause he directed that, if there should be no one living of his son M's race or descent, the said Government notes should be given to a certain charitable fund. At the time of the testator's death the wife and one daughter (C) of M were living. Subsequently a son was born to M, but this child died shortly after its birth. The wife of M died in September 1889, and M himself died in October 1889. The plaintiff then filed this suit claiming the property in question as heir of the testator to the exclusion of C, the daughter of M. He contended that she could only claim as one of the class of "sons or daughters" of M mentioned in the will; that the gift to this class was void, as it included, or might include, persons who were not in existence at the time of the testator's death. Held that C was entitled to the property under the will. The primary intention of the testator was that all the members of the class specified should take and his secondary intention was that, if all could not take, those who could should do so. Here there was one member of the class who could take the property, and it might be inferred that the testator meant that she should take it, rather than that his intention should be defeated altogether.

and their children—Right of children under such gift independently of the parents.—B, who died in 1834, left a will, in the English form, whereby he bequeathed a house to his two sons V and M, and directed that they should not sell or mortgage it, but were either to live in it or enjoy the rents and revenue thereof for ever. He further directed as follows:—"My son-in-law N with his wife S and children to live in the house for ever." V died in 1838, and his four grandsons were the first four defendants in this suit. M became insolvent, and his interest passed to the Official Assignee, who was the fifth defendant. S was the testator's daughter, and she and her husband N went to live in the house in question when the testator first went to reside there, and they and their family had lived there ever since. Both the plaintiffs (her sons) were born in the testator's lifetime. N died in 1844. S died in 1887. Subsequently to her death, her children (the plaintiffs) continued to reside in the house and to occupy the rooms which they had always occupied until April 1889, when the first four defendants, who were grandsons of V, dispossessed them. The plaintiffs filed this suit, praying for possession of the rooms, and for a declaration that they and their families were entitled to reside there. The defendants contended (1) that there was no gift to S's children independently of N; (2) that if there was a gift to the children, it was void, as being a gift to a class some members of which might have come into existence after the testator's death. Held that the clause in the will should be construed as giving the right to live in the house to S and the children after N's death. The benefit was intended to be conferred not only on N, but also on his wife and children; that this was not a devise to a class in the sense in which that expression was used in Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 363, viz., a gift to a body of persons uncertain in number at the time of the gift to be ascertained at a future time, the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number of persons. The benefit which each member of the class was to take was in no way dependent on the number of the children; each had a distinct and independent right to reside in the house, and the number of persons who might ultimately belong to the class was in no sense regarded as a criterion of the interest which each was to take. Quere—Whether *Soudaminy Dosses v. Gift to a class some of whom are not in existence at testator's death—Contingent gift—Subsequent gift valid, though prior gift void—Contingent gift—Succession Act, ss. 98, 100, 102, 103—Power of appointment given by will, Effect of—General power of appointment—M P by his will, dated 14th April 1878, after appointing his brother J to be his executor and directing the payment of legacies, bequeathed all his estate, moveable and immoveable, not otherwise disposed of to J, his executors, administrators and assigns, upon trust to collect outstandings and to pay debts and legacies and to stand possessed of the residuum in trust (1) for his (the testator's) wife B and A the wife of his brother J during the life of both, or the survivor of them, for their or her sole use; (2) and from and after decease of the survivor of them in trust for the male issue of J if any there be; (3) and, in default of such male issue, in trust for any person or persons, in any shares or share, and in such manner as his brother J should by any deed or deeds or writing or writings appoint with or without power of revocation or new appointment. J proved the will, and as executor managed the estate until his death on the 17th October 1888. He had no male issue, but he had two daughters, who were the defendants in this suit. Shortly before his death, viz., on the 7th October 1888, he made a will (as stated therein) in accordance with the authority given to him by the last clause of the will of M P. He directed that twelve months after the death of B (M P's widow), the estate should be divided equally between his two daughters, K and M. K was born in M P's lifetime, but M not until after his death. Held that the trust in M P's will in favour of the male issue of J was void under the rule laid down in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47. The testator plainly meant that the male issue of J living at the death of the survivor of the tenants for life should take the estate according to the rules of Hindu law, without distinguishing between those born in the lifetime of the testator and those born prior to that event, but subsequently to his death. At the death of the testator, J had no male issue, and the bequest was therefore a bequest to a person or persons not in being, and void. Held also, regarding the subsequent creation of the power in favour of J as equivalent to a gift of the estate to him, that such gift was valid, although the prior gift was void. It was a gift to him if he should have no male issue; a gift which, as he was alive at the death of the testator, was good under Hindu law. It was not a gift over to him on an indefinite failure of his male issue. It came into force immediately on the death of the surviving tenant for life if at that time he should have had no male issue alive between the death of the testator and the latter event. If a son had been born to him after the testator's death, the gift to him could not have come into operation. It was only in the event of no son being born to him that he could take. It would not therefore make any difference that the testator made an ineffectual and inoperative disposition in favour of such son if born. The rule of the Tagore case, that the gift of an estate to take effect after the failure of previously created invalid estates is void, did not apply. Held, further, that the power of appointment given by M P's will operated to confer ownership upon J after the death of B upon his executing his will, and that the bequests given by his will to his daughters, the defendants, were valid bequests. Held on appeal that the devise in M P's will in favour of the male issue of J meant in favour of such male issue as should be living at the time of the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, whether born in the lifetime of the testator or after his death; and as, at the death of the testator, J had no male issue, it was a gift to a person or persons not in being at that time, and therefore void under the rule in the Tagore case. Held also that the devise over, in default of such male issue, was an alternative gift to take effect on an event to be determined at the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, and consequently was not open to objection. Held further—as to the bequest to such person or persons as J should, by deed or writing, appoint—that there was no clear principle of Hindu law which forbade such a bequest being construed, and effect given to it, according to its plain and literal terms; always subject, however, to the same restrictions as the Hindu testamentary law imposes on the testator himself, viz., that the appointment should be made, so that (i) the appointee might be ascertained when the event arose on which he was to take (in this case, therefore, before the death of the surviving tenants for life), and (ii) the appointee be a person who was alive at the death of the testator. Held, accordingly, that in making this bequest the testator's intention was clearly to give J the ultimate disposal of the property, but not that it should form part of J's estate. The circumstance that English Courts, in such cases, treat the property, when the power has been exercised, as part of the estate of the appointor in the interest of creditors, and some other persons favoured by the Court of equity, could not affect the question as to what was the intention of M P when he made his will. Original Court's decree varied accordingly; the share in the residue appointed by J to his daughter M (born after the testator's death) being declared to be part of M P's estate of which he died intestate, and to belong, therefore, to his (M P's) heir. JAYENDRA v. 136. One member of such class in existence at date of gift—Will directing deed to be executed—Date of deed is date of gift.—A Hindu died in 1866 leaving a will whereby he directed his widow and executrix L to purchase an estate worth Rs20,000 for his grandson T, and that this estate should be conveyed to trustees, to be held by them in trust for T for his life or until his insolvency, and after his death for his son or other male heir. The executrix purchased the estate, but no trust deed was executed. T therefore brought a suit in 1871 to have the will carried out and a trust deed executed. T R (one of the plaintiffs in the present suit), who was T's uncle, was made a party to that suit, and a consent decree was passed which ordered that the executrix L and T R should execute a trust deed in accordance with the directions in the will. A deed was accordingly executed in 1876 whereby the property was conveyed to trustees on the trusts declared in the will. At the time of the testator's death, T had no sons, but at the date of the deed in 1876 he had one son C and in 1883 another son G (the defendant) was born to him. T died in 1890, C died childless in 1891. The plaintiffs, who were T R, the son, and T R's son, the grandson, of the testator, now claimed the property. They contended that, as neither of T's sons were in existence at the date of the testator's death, they could not take under his will or under the deed which was afterwards executed to carry out the will; that, although at the date of the deed in 1876 one of the sons (C) was in existence, nevertheless he could only claim as one of a class, and that class was not ascertained or ascertainable at the date of the testator's death, nor at the date of the deed, G not having been born until 1883. The whole class was therefore excluded and the property after T's death was undisposed of. Held that, in view of the direction of the will that a deed was to be executed which should declare the trusts of the property, it was the date of the deed subsequently executed which should be regarded in order to determine the validity of the limitations of the property bequeathed, and not the date of the testator's death, and that, under the deed, on the death of T, his son C became entitled to the property. In the case of a gift to a class if there is a person in existence at the time of the gift capable of taking and whom undoubtedly the donor intends to benefit, he is entitled to take, although others of the same class subsequently come into existence whom the donor meant the gift also to benefit, but who cannot take because of their non-existence at the date of the gift. TRIBHUVANDAS KUTTONJI v. GANGADAS TRICUMJI . . . I L R., 16 Bom., 7

137. Bequest to "children"—Meaning of the expression "children"—Gift to a class—Gift of income as required with trust for accumulation of balance.—Considerations which only show that a testator has made a disposition in his will which the Court is surprised to find there, though they might have determined the sense in which the testator had used an ambiguous expression, cannot of themselves lead the Court to refuse to give effect to the plain language he has employed, e.g., to read a bequest to "children" as a bequest to "sons" only. A bequest to "the children of R living at his decease," where some such children are in existence at the date of the will, need not be construed as a gift to a class of which some members might come into existence after the testator's death, when such a construction would manifestly defeat the primary object of the testator. A direction in a will to trustees to pay to a Hindu lady so much of certain dividends as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, etc., and to accumulate the surplus not required by her upon trusts, entitles the legatee to receive, if she requires it, the whole interest as it falls due, but not to claim afterwards amounts which she did not require as they fell due, and which have been accumulated, and this is so whether the trust for which accumulation is directed is valid or invalid. KRISHNABAO RAMCHANDRA v. BENABAI

138. ——— Members of a class not in existence at testator's death—Void gift—Intention of testator—Gift to widows of sons is a gift to a class.—A testator gave his property to his executors and trustees, who were to apply the income as directed. He further directed that after the death of the last survivor of his five sons the property should be divided as directed among the sons of his sons and daughters of his sons, and provision was made in certain events for the widows of his deceased sons. He left him surviving his five sons, three grandsons and three grand-daughters. After his death two more grand-daughters were born. Held that the gifts to the sons, daughters, and widows of deceased sons were void. They were gifts to a class of which some members were not in existence at the time of the testator's death. The principle deducible from the authorities is that it is the primary duty of the Court so to construe the will as to carry out, as far as possible, the intentions of the testator, and that, if the Court comes to the conclusion that the testator had the primary intention of benefiting all the members of a class and if such intention fails by reason of its being void, yet if the Court can deduce a secondary intention that at least such members of the class should take as were in existence at the time of the testator's death, then effect should be given to such secondary intention, but not otherwise. For the purpose of ascertaining these primary and secondary intentions, it is, of course, necessary to take all the material facts as to the testator's family into consideration and to read the various provisions of his will as a whole. A gift in a will to widows of sons is, in the case of Hindus, a gift to a class, as Hindus by their law are permitted to have more than one wife at the same time. Ram Lal v. Kanai Lal, I. L. 139. ——— Remoteness—"Descendants"—Bequest creating series of life-interests.—Under a bequest by a Hindu of Rs 10 per month, followed by a direction to the following effect: "In this manner continue to pay in the legatee's name so long as he shall be alive; after his death continue to pay the same to his descendants from generation to generation,"—Held, first, that the legatee took only a life-interest under the bequest; second, that the words "from generation to generation" did not import more than what "absolutely" and "for ever" import in an English instrument; third, that the descendants in existence at the time of the tenant-for-life's death took absolutely as a class; and, fourth, that such descendants were entitled in equal shares to an amount sufficient to produce the monthly sum of Rs 10.

Remarks on the construction of Hindu wills. "Descendants" of the testator in a Hindu will would include children and grandchildren living at his decease, but not the testator's brother or widow. There is no rule of Hindu law imposing any restriction in point of time on the operation of a bequest creating a series of successive life-interests in each generation of a legatee's descendants; but semble—the grounds of the rules against perpetuities are applicable to the property of Hindus, and the Court will be very reluctant to construe a Hindu will so as to tie up property for an indefinite period. ARUMAGAM MUDALI v. ANMI AMMAL . . . 1 Mad., 400

140. ——— Estate-tail—

Accumulation.—A Hindu by his will directed that his estate should remain intact, and that the profits should be applied, in the first place, towards performing religious duties; and he provided that his immovable property, business, and the capital stock thereof should also remain intact, and that his heirs, sons' sons, and great-grandsons in succession should be entitled to the profits, no person having any right of alienation. The testator then provided that his eldest son should act as manager and shebait, and prepare accounts, and that he should have no power of alienation. He then made provisions for the payment of Government revenue, and declared that of the surplus profits, six-sixteenths should be applied in part towards the worship of his ancestral deities, and the residue towards the maintenance of all the members of the family and religious ceremonies; the remaining ten-sixteenths to be carried to the credit of his estate. In case of dispute between his eldest son and the testator's third wife, the mother of the testator's minor children, the testator directed that his eldest son should receive five-sixteenths of the ten annas share; if another son should be born of the testator's third wife, the remaining eleven-sixteenths was to go to her sons. If no son was born, then the eldest son was to take five and a half sixteenths, and the sons of the third wife the remaining ten and a half sixteenths, absolutely, as long as the family remained joint; the expenses of the debsheva and maintenance of the family were to be defrayed from the six annas share. In case of separation, the shares of the sons were to be placed to their respective credits every year, each son on attaining majority to be entitled to his share. The testator then provided that, in case of separation, his sons (with the exception of the landed properties and capital stock of the business, and the articles used by the idols) should be at liberty to take the moveable property absolutely according to the conditions laid down for the division of the ten annas share of the profits. He then provided for the maintenance of his third wife and minor sons out of the six annas share, each son on attaining majority to be entitled to his share under the will absolutely. After providing that his sons should live in his ancestral dwelling-house, but that none of them should have any power of alienation, the testator directed that, if any of his heirs died without male issue, the widow of such heir should receive maintenance only, and that his grandson by a daughter should get nothing, but his share should go over to the surviving sons. The testator finally directed that his eldest son, son's grandsons, and other heirs in succession, should perform the duties of karta and shabait. In a suit by the widow of one of the testator's sons by his third wife, seeking to recover such a share of the testator's property as she would have been entitled to in case of intestacy.—Held that the intention of the testator in disposing of the profits of the six annas share was not an intention to create a valid estate in the corpus in favour of any individual, but to tie up such corpus and to give the profits only to his male descendants; or, in other words, to create a sort of estate in tail male in the profits, and that the bequest was void. Held also that the disposition of the ten annas share of the profits was void, there being in one event a direction to accumulate for ever without a disposition of the profits; and in the other event, the gift was void for the same reasons as the gift of the six annas share. Held, further, that the disposition of the family dwelling-house, save in so far as it prohibited alienation, was good, and that there was a sufficient disposition of the moveable property. SHOOKMOY CHUNDER DAS v. MONOHARI DASI I L. R., 7 Cal., 269

[8 C. L. R., 478

Held on appeal by the Privy Council, affirming this decision, that the Hindu law does not allow such a disposition of property as would have been made by a testator whose intention was to give to his descendants the profits only of his estate for their benefit, and for the maintenance of religious services, but not to dispose of the estate itself. Held that, according to the true construction of the will taken altogether, the testator's intention was not to pass the estate. This was confirmed by the clauses against alienation, and for the accumulation, as long as the family should remain joint, of a certain share of the profits; another portion being assigned for the religious services. This was not a case in which a testator, having expressed an intention that his estate should pass, had added a clause against alienation, in which case the latter clause would have been merely void. Held, accordingly, that this bequest was invalid. An account of the profits of the estate, from the date of the death of the testator, having been ordered by the decree of the Court below in favour of the inheritor of a share at whose instance the bequest was held invalid.—Held that this did not mean that enquiry should be made into the different payments by the manager for the time being, or moneys taken out by the members of the family, but that it should be ascertained to what portion of the savings of the family, or of the accumulations made, such shares would be entitled; and that this order was accordingly correct. SHOOKMOY CHUNDER DAS v. was desirous of disposing of his moveable and immoveable estate, so as to ensure a perpetual income for the worship of the family idols, and the maintenance of his heirs, after making provision for his funeral and shradh, and for the payment of a pecuniary legacy, gave and bequeathed all his moveable estate to the Official Trustee of Bengal for the time being, on trust out of the income to pay over the same to the trustees of the will, to whom he devised and bequeathed all his immoveable estate and the income of his moveable estate in the hands of the Official Trustee on trust for the maintenance of the family idol, subject to the following trusts:—In the first place, out of the income of the moveable estate, to keep all the houses in the trust premises in repair; in the second place, to suffer his two widows, K and L, with their children and families to reside in the family dwelling-house, during their lives and on their deaths to suffer all his heirs, according to the Hindu law of succession, to reside in such house for ever; in the third place, to pay out of the moveable estate to his wife K monthly Rs 5 during her natural life, and to her children monthly Rs 5, during the same period, and on her decease to her children and their heirs according to Hindu law, monthly Rs 100 for ever, for their support and maintenance. (Similar trusts in favour of L and her children followed.) The residue of the income of the moveable estate was directed to be paid, by moieties to the widows, and on the death of each, her share was to be given to her issue in the same way as the other sums were directed to be paid to them respectively. Held that the recital as to the testator's desire to establish a perpetuity did not invalidate the subsequent trusts, so far as they were otherwise good according to law; that the trust for the repair of the house was valid during the lives of the two widows and the survivor of them; that the trust to allow the two widows and their families to occupy the family dwelling-house was a trust for the widows and no one else, empowering them with their families and any others whom they might choose to make members of their families to reside in the house; that the trust to allow the testator's children, and their heirs on death of the widow, to occupy the house, was void; that the wives were entitled to Rs 5 monthly, and the children of each, during the lives of their respective mothers, to Rs 5, equally; that the trusts to pay Rs 100 monthly to the children of each of the widows, on their respective deaths for ever, was void; that the gift of the residue to the widows in moieties was valid for their respective lives, but the gift to their issue on their respective deaths invalid, and that the trust for the worship, subject to the other trusts, so far as they were valid, was good. KALLY PRASONO MITTER v. 142. ————— Bequest void for remoteness.—A Hindu testator died possessed of considerable property, and leaving a will, dated 12th September 1870, by which he appointed his wife executrix in the following words: "I appoint my wife, A D, executrix on my behalf, and vest her with

entire authority and responsibility. After my decease, my said wife shall perform all duties according to my instructions embodied in the following paragraphs. [After reciting that his wife was a purda woman, and that his three sons were disobedient and extravagant, he appointed certain persons managers to perform certain duties under the will which could not be performed by a purda woman; and after various minor bequests and directions, he directed that, if it should appear to the executrix or executors for the time being that they would not be able to protect the property, then they should form a family fund in the Government trust fund of all the property, and that the interest thereof should be employed in the performance of certain religious ceremonies and the family expenses, and then bequeathed as follows]:—"Whatever Company's paper, moveable and immovable property, etc., shall be formed into a family fund in the Government trust fund, my great-grandsons shall, when they attain majority, receive the whole to their satisfaction, and they will divide and take the same in accordance with the Hindu law. God forbid it, but should I have no great-grandsons in the male line, then my daughter's sons, when they are of age, shall take the said property from the trust fund and divide it according to the Hindu shastras in vogue." The testator left living at the time of his death one son's son, three sons, and a daughter and her sons, but no great-grandson. Held that the bequest to the great-grandsons was void and inoperative for remoteness, that the bequest to the daughter's sons was dependent on, and not alternative to, the gift to the great-grandsons, and therefore a bequest void under s. 103 of the Succession Act. Held also that A D was invested under the will with only a representative character, and was therefore not entitled beneficially to any residue of the estate as against parties who might have any interest therein. BRAJANATH DEY SIKHAR v. ANANDANATH DAS

148. Successive interests, Bequest of—Gift over after life-interest—Construction of gift to persons, and the heirs male of their bodies.—A will cannot institute a course of succession unknown to the Hindu law; and in conferring successive estates, the rule is that an estate of inheritance must be such a one as is known to the Hindu law, which an English estate-tail is not. It is competent to a Hindu testator to provide for the defeasance of a prior absolute estate contingently upon the happening of a future event; but an important part of the rules relating thereto is: first, the event must be one that will happen, if at all, at latest immediately upon the close of a life in being at the time of the gift (as decided in the Mullick case, Soorjeemoney Dassie v. Dinobundoo Mullick, 9 Moore's I. A., 123). Secondly, that a defeasance by way of gift over must be in favour of some person in existence at the time of the gift (as laid down in the Tagore case, Jatindra Mohun Tagore v. Ganendro Mohun Tagore, L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47: 9 B. L. R., 377), the latter case deciding not only that a gift to a person unborn is invalid, but that an attempt to establish a new rule of inheritance is invalid. A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his executors upon trust to pay the income to his daughter during her lifetime; and after her death in trust to convey the residue to his two half-brothers, in equal moieties, and to the heir or heirs male of their or either of their bodies, on failure of whom upon trust to give the same to the sons or son of his daughter. Both the half-brothers survived the testator. On the death of one of them, the daughter (to whom children, as well as to the half-brothers, had been born), making all persons interested parties, claimed that the trust and limitations had become void as to one moiety of the residue bequeathed, and that she had become entitled thereto for the estate of a Hindu daughter. Of the children, all were born after the testator's death, save three sons of the surviving half-brother, who were born in the testator's lifetime. Held that the gift of the residue, so far as it purported to confer an estate of inheritance on the half-brothers and the heirs male of their bodies, was contrary to law and void; that the gift to the plaintiff's sons, unborn at the death of the testator, was incapable of taking effect; that each of the half-brothers took an estate for life in one moiety of the residue bequeathed, in remainder expectant on the death of the plaintiff; and that accordingly, on the death of the half-brother, who had died before this suit was brought, the inheritance of his moiety had devolved on the plaintiff, as daughter and heir of her father, and as she claimed. KRISHNOMONI DAS v. 144. Male issue—Gift to unborn person—Bequest void for remoteness.—Where a testator directed in his will that (first) "on the death of either of my four sons leaving lawful male issue, such issue shall succeed to the capital or principal of the respective shares of his or their deceased father or fathers, to be paid or transferred to them respectively on attaining the full age of twenty-one years; (second) if either of my four sons shall die leaving male issue and the whole of such issue shall afterwards die under the age of twenty-one years and without male issue, the share or shares of the sons so dying shall go and belong to the survivors of my said sons and to my two grandsons (named in the will) for life and their respective male issue absolutely after their death; and (third) on the death of either of my sons without leaving any male issue his share is to go and belong to the survivors of my said sons and my two grandsons (named in the will) for life, and their respective male issue absolutely after their death in the same manner and proportions as hereinbefore described respecting their original shares; it was held, first, that a vested interest was conferred upon the issue immediately upon the death of the father. The expression "to be paid or transferred to them respectively on attaining the age of twenty-one years" was a mere attempt to defer the period of payment to, or enjoyment by, such issue. Second, that the gift over was void, because the event on which it was to take effect might be indefinitely remote, even if the words "male issue" be construed as meaning sons. The meaning of "male issue" is not confined to sons alone. Third, That in accordance with the ruling in Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 108, a gift by a Hindu to a person not ascertained or capable of being ascertained at the time of the death of the testator cannot take effect; therefore, the gift to the unborn male issue of the sons and grandsons of the testator must fail. Where there is a gift to a class, and some persons constituting such class cannot take in consequence of the remoteness of the gift or otherwise, the whole bequest must fail. Held also, in accordance with Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 108, that a Hindu cannot, under any circumstances, make a gift by will to an unborn person or persons. BRAMAMAYI DAS v. JAGES CHANDRA DUTT . . . 8 B. L. R., 400

145. ———— Gift void for remoteness.—Where a will gave the testator's widow permission to adopt and made provision for the adopted son entering into possession after her death, providing further that, if the adopted son died unmarried, the estate should pass to the testator's nearest sapinda-gyani.—Held that the gift or bequest was, according to the doctrine laid down by the Privy Council in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377, void and of no effect, because the nearest sapinda was a person who might not be in existence at the death of the testator, being one who could not be ascertained at that time. RAMGUTTER ACHARJEE v. 146. ———— Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), ss. 2, 3, and 6—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 98, 99, and 101—Gift to unborn persons.—A Hindu testator, by his will made in 1872, provided that, should he never have a son, his daughter's sons, when they came to years of discretion, should receive certain properties in equal shares; and he directed that, if his daughters had no sons, or should not be likely to have sons, then that such of his daughters as should reside in the ancestral family dwelling-house should receive a certain monthly allowance. The testator died in 1873, leaving only his daughters him surviving. Held that, the will being governed by the Hindu Wills Act, the bequest to the daughter's son was valid. The rule of construction laid down in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377, does not apply to wills of Hindus made since the passing of Act XXI of 1871. The words "create any interests" in the last proviso to s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act should be read as referring only to the estate or interest which can be given, without reference to the further question to whom it can be given. ALANGAMONJORI DABEE v. SONAMONI DABEE . I. L. R., 8 Cal., 157; 9 C. L. R., 121 prior or subsequently to the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, is void. The words "to create an interest" in the fifth proviso to s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, apply both to the quantity and quality of the interest created, and in their natural and ordinary meaning include the capacity of a donee to take. ALANGAMONJORI DABEE v. SONAMONI DABEE [I. L. R., 8 Cal., 637; 10 C. L. R., 459]

147. ———— Gift to grandsons after death of annuitants—Vesting, Postponement of—Inconsistent declarations rejected.—A testator, after charging certain annuities and other payments on his estate, gave the whole of his property to his grandsons in these words: "I give the whole of my property to my grandsons; but until those portions of the said property and the monthly stipends which I have given to some to enjoy for the natural term of their lives shall revert to the estate after their deaths, my estate shall not be divided amongst any of my grandsons or my great-grandsons. After all the pensioners have died, and after the enjoyment of the said pensions and property shall have ceased, the executor's power shall be annulled, and then my grandsons and my grandsons' heirs—that is to say, my great-grandsons—shall be able to divide the whole of the property and take their father's shares." He further directed that, for five years after his death, his family should remain joint, and allowed to his executors Rs400 for family expenses. Held that the will contained sufficiently direct words of present gift to the grandsons, and that the clause in which it was attempted to postpone the enjoyment in possession, and other clauses which directed accumulation, must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant. Held also that the fact that the estate was subject to partial trusts or charges did not postpone the vesting in possession; nor would it, even according to English law, let in grandsons of the testator born after his death during the continuance of the trusts. ALANGAMONJORI DABEE v. SONAMONI DABEE, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 637, discussed by PONTIFEX, J. KALLY NATH NAUGH CHOWDHRY v. CHUNDER NATH NAUGH CHOWDHRY [I. L. R., 8 Cal., 878; 10 C. L. R., 207]

148. ———— Gift of residue of income of property "to be used for the purposes of A and B as trustees think proper"—Gift to future children of testator's daughter—Power of appointment by will given to daughter in case no children born.—A Hindu inhabitant of Bombay by his will directed that his immovable property in Bombay should be formed into a trust, of which he appointed certain trustees. Out of the net income of the trust, the trustees were to pay Rs50 to his wife and his daughter M for their personal expenses, and the residue was "to be used for the purposes of my wife and my daughter M and her children in such manner as my trustees think proper." M was thirty years of age at the hearing of the suit, and had no children. Held that this was a gift of the residue of the net rents in equal shares to the wife and M, and that the survivor of them would be entitled during her life to the entirety of the said rents. The testator further directed that after M's death the trust was to stand valid during the lifetime of her children (if any), and that afterwards the heirs of such children should divide and receive the property. But if M had no children, then, after the death of the wife and M, the trust should become void, and the property was to be delivered to such person as M might by will appoint. Held (1) that the provision for the future children (if any) of M failed under the ruling in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47. If any children should be born, the question would arise as to what would become of the property; (2) that the direction that the property should be delivered to such person as M should by will appoint was a valid direction, subject, however, to the limitation that the person to whom M appointed should be a person in existence at the death of the testator. BAI MOTIVARU v. BAI MANUBAI. I. L. R., 19 Bom., 647.

In the same case on appeal to the Privy Council, Held that, even if Hindu wills are not to be regarded in all respects as gifts to take effect upon the death of the testator, they are generally to be regarded, as to the property which they can transfer and as to the persons to whom transfer can be made, as regulated by the Hindu law of gift. The Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47, referred to and followed. A Hindu testator devised his immovable property upon trust for the income to be appropriated to the maintenance of his widow and of his daughter, and of the children that might be born of her, the property to be divided among the heirs of such children. If there should not be any children born of his daughter, the property under the will should devolve upon those "to whom she might direct it to be delivered by making her will." The daughter having had no children, and questions having arisen between the daughter and the widow as to the administration of the estate according to the will, Held that there was not an absolute gift to the daughter, and that the persons to whom the property was given, though to be designated by her, did not take the gift from her, but from the testator. The judgment in Hison v. Oliver, 13 Ves., 109, was not applicable. According to the already settled law, if the testator himself had designated the persons to take in the event of his daughter having no child, the gift would have been valid as an executory bequest, supported by preceding life-interests, but valid only under the following restriction, viz., that to render the gift valid, the taker so designated must have been, either actually or in contemplation of law, in existence at the death of the testator. In this case, no principle of Hindu law stood in the way to prevent the testator from substituting his daughter for himself as the person empowered to designate; but the same limitation held good as to the existence being requisite of the donee at the end of the donor's life, in order that the power might be validly exercised. There was no application of the English law of "powers," which was not fit to be applied generally to Hindu wills. Subject to the above restriction, the power in question was valid. It was not decided upon whom the property would devolve, if the power should not be exercised. BAI MOTIVARU v. BAI MANUBAI. [I. L. R., 21 Bom., 709; L. R., 24 I. A., 78; 1 C. W. N., 288.]

The power conferred by will to make a gift must be a power to convey property to a person in existence, either actually or in contemplation of law, at the death of the testator. BAI MOTIVARU v. BAI MANUBAI, I. L. R., 21 Bom., 709; L. R., 24 I. A., 78, relied upon. UPENDRA LAL BORAL v. HEM CHANDRA BORAL, I. L. R., 25 Cal., 406; 1 C. W. N., 288.*

150. Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 101, 102, and 159—Power of disposition of moveable property—Effect of subsequent void gift—Gift of balance of rents of immovable property, in hands of trustees—Evidence of intention to limit duration of enjoyment of bequest—Gift by implication, What is necessary to constitute—Estates according to Hindu law in ancestral property, Presumption as to—Effect of assent to provision of will by son of Hindu testator, where there is doubt whether property is ancestral or self-acquired.—Where it is doubtful whether the property with which the will of a deceased Hindu purports to deal is ancestral or self-acquired, the assent of his only son to the provisions of the will, some of which are favourable and some unfavourable to his interest and that of his sons, will bind the latter as well as himself. A direction in the will of a Hindu to the following effect: "My remaining moveable property shall be dealt with by my son G according as he may think proper; and when the sons of my son G shall attain the age of twenty-one years, the same shall be divided and duly received by G and his sons in equal shares," confers an absolute gift on G. If the gift over to G's sons, on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, were valid, the absolute estate of G would be liable to be divested on a son or sons of G attaining the age of twenty-one years, and asking for a division; but that gift being clearly void under ss. 101 and 102 of the Succession Act (X of 1865), its insertion has no effect on the words of absolute gift preceding it. A direction in the will of a Hindu that immovable property should be retained in the hands of trustees appointed by the will, and that the balance of the rents, profits, etc., after the payment of expenses, should be used and enjoyed by the testator's son G in such manner as he might think fit, with a provision empowering the sons of such son to call him to account for the management of the property on attaining the age of twenty-one, and with a direct, though void, gift over to the grandsons of such son, confers only a life-estate on the son G,—the vesting of the property in trustees, the right of G's sons to ask for an account, and the gift over to G's grandsons, all showing an intention on the testator's part that the enjoyment of the bequest should be of limited duration within the meaning of s. 159 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). To constitute a gift by implication in a will, there must be a reasonable degree of certainty as to the persons intended to take and the nature of the estates which they are intended to take. A direction that until the son or sons of the tenant for life of immovable property should attain a certain age, no person on behalf of such son or sons should ask the tenant for life for an account or raise any objection, does not sufficiently define the persons to take, or the estates in which they are to take, constitute a gift by implication. It would be difficult, if not impossible, for a Hindu to create by express terms the estates which arise by virtue of the doctrine of Hindu law in regard to the rights of male issue in ancestral property; and even where the hypothesis that the testator intended (under a misapprehension of the law) to create such estates affords a key to the will and gives an adequate explanation of the various estates which would have to be implied in order to give full effect to the different directions contained in the will, yet if the estates cannot be implied from the words used in the will, the Court cannot create such estates for the testator by implication, since to do so would be to construct a will for him based upon his supposed intention, not on the words which he has used. ANANDRAO VINAYAK v. (2) BEQUEST EXCLUDING LEGAL COURSE OF INHERITANCE.

151. ———— Gift ineffectual so far as it departs from the law of inheritance—Gift over of accrued share.—A testator gave by his will to three sons of his brother certain estates "for payment of the expenses of their pious acts." He also directed as follows: "The said three nephews shall hold possession of the above in equal shares, and shall pay the Government revenue of the same into the Collectorate. They shall have no right to alienate the same by gift or sale, but they, their sons, grandsons, and their descendants in the male line shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall think fit for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors. If any die without leaving a male child, which God forbid, then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews, and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs." In a suit between the survivor of the three nephews and the testator's heir,—Held by the High Court a gift by will upon condition that the subject-matter should descend to heirs male only is void by Hindu law. Held also that the gift was bad in so far as it restricted the subject-matter of the gift to male descendants, but that the language used relating to the gift over to the testator's surviving nephew or nephews was not inconsistent with the intention of the testator that the whole augmented share should pass to the plaintiff, the sole surviving nephew; but that, having regard to the doctrine frequently acted

Held on appeal by the Privy Council that a gift by will, attempting to exclude the legal course of inheritance, is only effectual, in favour of such person as can take, to the extent to which the will is consistent with the Hindu law; and it is a distinct departure from that law to restrict the order of succession to males excluding females; that the attempt to alter the legal course of inheritance failed, and that the estate taken under the above clause was only for life. The gift over of a life-estate was competent; it being to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, and to take effect on the death of a person or persons then alive. On the death of one brother, his share went to the two other brothers, and on the death of one of the latter his augmented share, made up of his original and accrued share, went to the survivor. TAROKHSSUR ROY v. 152. ———— Restrictions on bequest—Restrictions upon estate bequeathed, Effect of, if contrary to Hindu law—Restriction separable from valid dispositions.—In the will of a Hindu restrictions contrary to law made by the will upon valid dispositions, if they are separable from the latter, need not be held to invalidate them. Three documents, of which the second and third were executed by a testator after intervals of some years, together formed his will, containing a bequest of estate to his sons. This was held valid by the High Court, although the testator in the later documents had endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the estate contrary to law, and therefore inoperative; the principal of them being (a) prohibition of actual possession or alienation, by any son, of his share in the estate; and (b) direction that the whole estate should be managed in a common catcherry, with religious trusts, the sons to get only the remaining amount of profit according to their respective shares in perpetuity. At the same time, the Court held good a provision for defraying the marriage expenses of sons from joint funds, with the direction in the will that until the youngest son should attain majority none of the sons should have a right to partition; any son who should separate from the others getting, up to the time of his attaining majority, merely maintenance, and not the profits accruing upon his share. A gift over was that on the death of a son surviving sons should take his share proportionately to their own, and that, if any of the sons so taking should die leaving sons, such sons should receive their proportionate parts of the deceased son's share: the first part of this provision was held good, not being invalidated by the second, which, as constituting a gift to an indefinite class, would take effect. (a) RESIDUARY ESTATE.

153. ————— Residue undisposed of—Balance undisposed of, Disposition of—Bequest to heir, Effect of, on his right to residue—Disharison.—In a suit in which a will of one L C was alleged to be a forgery,—Held, on the evidence, that the will of L C was genuine. By the said will, L C had directed Rs25,000 to be paid to the plaintiff's mother and her family. He appointed the defendant's father (T L) his executor, and gave him control and authority over the business. He did not, however, in express terms dispose of the residue of his property, and there was, after providing for the above legacy of Rs25,000, a considerable balance to the credit of the business at the time of the testator's death. Held that such balance was a residue undisposed of by the will, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share of such residue which was to be divided as if there was no will. But the business itself from the date of the testator's death was to go to T L. Mere bequests of special portions of the testator's estate to the heir without language of disharison do not exclude him from the undisposed of residue. TOOLSHYDAS LUDHA v. PREMJI TRICUMDAS

(a) SURVIVORSHIP.

154. ————— Gift to two persons for life jointly—Gift to a daughter and her children—Effect of power giving to a daughter if she had no children to dispose of property bequeathed by will—Bequest for house expenses—Bequest by testator of his wife's ornaments—Election.—J, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, died in November 1869, leaving a will, dated October 1869. He left a widow and one child, the plaintiff M, then about fourteen years of age. She had then been married for two years, but up to the time of this suit she had had no children. By this will the testator directed that his immoveable property in Bombay should be formed into a trust, and that the trustees were to collect the income thereof. By the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of his will he directed that out of the trust fund Rs50 per month were to be paid both to his wife and daughter for their personal expenses. In the seventh clause he directed as follows: "After deducting expenses . . . money is to be paid out of the net income, whatever it may amount to, for the personal expenses of my wife and my daughter M, and for the children of my daughter M after her death agreeably to the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of this will; and after paying the same, whatever income may remain is to be paid for the purposes of my wife and my daughter M and her children in such manner as my trustees may think proper." The eighth clause directed that, if M should have children, the trust should stand valid during the lifetime, and the trust-property should then be apportioned amongst the heirs. It then proceeded: "But should there be no children born of the womb of my daughter M, then after the death of M and my wife this trust is to become void, and the property delivered to such persons as my daughter M may direct it to be delivered by making her will." Held (1) that the direction in the seventh clause amounted to a gift of the residue for the use of the testator's wife and M; that his wife and M were, under the clause, entitled to the income of the fund in equal shares during their joint lives, and that the survivor would take the whole for her lifetime. (2) That M having no children at the date of the testator's death, the provision for her future children was void under the ruling in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47. (3) That the direction, that if M had no children she might dispose of the property by will, was valid, and amounted to an absolute gift to her if she gave the requisite direction by will. The gift did not offend against the rule in the Tagore case. The persons to whom the property is given would take it from M, and not from the testator. The testator by his will further directed that Rs750 a month were to be paid to his wife for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the house and the worship of thakur (God). Held that no part of this sum could be awarded to M. The testator expected that she would live with the testator's wife and made no provision for the event of her ceasing to do so. The testator also disposed of ornaments described as "my own and my wife's ornaments." Held that the clause did not raise a question of election. The wife's stridhan ornaments would not fall within the clause if there were other ornaments which she wore, and of which the testator had power to dispose. BAI MAMURAI v. DOSAA MORARJI

155. ————— Contingent executory bequest over—Period of distribution of property bequeathed—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 111—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870).—A Hindu at his death left three sons, the eldest of full age, and the other two minors. In his will were the directions: "My three sons shall be entitled to enjoy all the moveable and immoveable properties left by me equally. Any one of the sons dying earlier, the surviving sons shall be entitled to all the properties equally." Held that these words gave a legacy to the survivors contingently on the happening of a specified uncertain event, which had not happened before the period when the property bequeathed was distributable, that period of distribution being the time of the testator's death. It would be impossible to decide that the period was postponed by reason of the personal incapacity of some of the beneficiaries. Therefore, under s. 111 of the Succession Act, 1865, applicable under the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, the legacy to the surviving brothers could not take effect, and the original gift to the testator's three sons was

(c) FAMILY, MEANING OF.

156. Specific trusts—Residue, illegal disposition of the—Period of trust, where one period prescribed illegal and the other legal.—A testator, devised certain property in trust for the maintenance and support of his family. Held (per WHITE, J.)—The word "family" means the relatives of the testator, whether connected by marriage or blood, who were living at the time of the testator's death and then formed part of his household and were maintained by him. Held (by the Appeal Court)—It is doubtful whether the above construction was not too wide and whether the more nearly true meaning may not be "the testator's descendants and their wives living at the time of his death." Specific trusts or specific estates good in themselves are not invalidated by a subsequent illegal disposition of the residue or remainder. Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B. L. R., 377, and Krishna Ramani Dasi v. Ananda Krishna Bose, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 281, followed. Where a testator prescribes two distinct periods during each of which he wishes the trusts to be in force, and one of such periods is legal and the other not, the trusts will take effect during the period which is legal. *KHETTER MOHAN MULLICK v. (p) MAINTENANCE.

157. Right of daughter to maintenance after her marriage—Married daughter in good circumstances—Trust for maintenance.—A Hindu testator, after making the Administrator General of Bengal executor and trustee of his will, and giving his daughter an annuity of Rs 5 a month for her life, provided for the payment to G C B, whom he constituted the guardian of his daughter and of his only son during their minority, of the sum of Rs 225 "monthly and every month for the maintenance and education of my said son and the support of my said daughter and such other persons as live in my house and are supported at my expense," and further provided that all "the residue of my estate, moveable and immoveable, with all accumulations and additions" should be conveyed to his son on his attaining majority, "subject nevertheless to the trust of maintaining my said daughter." The daughter had married a man of means, and did not need any maintenance. Held, in a suit by the daughter for a construction of the will and for a specific sum to be set apart for her maintenance, that the plaintiff was not entitled to anything by way of a separate allowance for maintenance; she was only entitled under the will (apart from her annuity of Rs 5 a month) to be provided for in case she were otherwise unprovided for. Where the construction of a will was not so difficult as to have

On a close holiday, a Judge might properly decline to proceed with any enquiry, trial, or other matter on the civil side of his Court; and any party to any judicial proceeding could successfully object to any such inquiry being proceeded with, and, in the event of any such enquiry having been proceeded with in his absence and without his consent, would be entitled to have the proceeding set aside as irregular, probably in any event, and certainly if his interests had been prejudiced by such irregularity. But, at the furthest, the entertaining and deciding upon a matter within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court on a close holiday is an irregularity the right to which can be waived by the conduct of the parties; and a party, who on a close holiday does attend, and without protest takes part in a judicial proceeding, cannot afterwards successfully dispute the jurisdiction of the Judge to hear and determine such matter. *Barnett v. HOTEL-KEEPER AND GUEST.

1. ———— Lodging or boarding-house-keeper and lodger—inn-keeper—Liability for goods lost.—This suit was brought to recover the value of certain articles stolen from the plaintiff's rooms at an hotel in Bombay. The defendant was the licensed proprietor of the hotel, who was in the habit of entertaining, for shorter or longer periods, all comers willing to pay the usual charges, and the plaintiff was an exchange broker, doing business in Bombay, who had lived at the hotel for more than a year, paying for his board and lodging at first by the day, and afterwards by agreement at the rate of so much a month, but neither was the plaintiff under any obligation to remain, nor the defendant to accommodate him for any fixed time. Held that the relation of inn-keeper and guest (and not that of boarding-house-keeper and lodger) subsisted between the parties; and that the defendant was prima facie, and without proof of actual negligence, liable to make good the loss sustained by the plaintiff. There is no law but the Common Law of England to regulate the relation of inn-keeper and guest in Bombay, in a case between a European and Parsee. WHATELEY v. PALANJI PESTANJI. 3 Bom., O. C., 137

1. LAW APPLICABLE TO.1. — Application of English law

—Analogy between hundi and bill of exchange.—Where the analogy between native hundi and English bills of exchange is complete, the English law is to be applied. SUMBOONATH GHOSH v. JODPONATH CHATTERJEE . . . 2 Hyde, 259

2. ACCEPTANCE.

2. — Communication of acceptance to holder and drawer.—Omission by drawee to notify non-acceptance.—An insolvent firm had drawn certain hundis on the plaintiffs payable to the defendant. The defendant had endorsed them to one M. The plaintiffs' Bombay firm was the agent of M, and M accordingly sent the hundis to the plaintiffs, as his agents, for realization. The hundis, however, were dishonoured, and M thereupon returned them to the defendant, and received their value from the defendant, who in this suit now sought to set off the amount so paid by them against the claim of the plaintiffs. It was contended that the plaintiffs were not liable, as there was no proof that the hundis had been accepted by them, it not having been shown that the acceptance had been communicated to M, the owner of the hundis, and that until such communication the plaintiffs were at liberty to cancel their acceptance. Held that the acceptance by the plaintiffs was complete; and that the defendant was entitled to the set-off claimed. The hundis had come to the plaintiffs for acceptance on the 28th October 1884, and their non-acceptance had not been notified to M on the 3rd November. That would be an unreasonable period during which to hold the hundis in dubio. On the 30th October the plaintiffs had stated by letter to the drawer's firm that the hundis had been accepted. That meant that all things had been done to make the acceptance complete. The absence of entries in the plaintiffs' book, with reference to the hundis, afforded no inference that they were not accepted. Semble—A communication of acceptance to the drawer, or to a previous holder, binds the acceptor, as well as a communication to the present holder, inasmuch as the acceptance endures for the benefit of them as well as for the actual holder, and the primary contract is between the drawer and the acceptor. PRAGDAS THAKURDAS v. DOWLATRAM NANCIAM . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 257

3. ENDORSEMENT.

3. — Necessity for endorsement
—Hundi given for particular purpose.—Hundi payable to order.—A party who receives a hundi for a particular purpose must apply the same accordingly, and neither he nor any third party knowing the facts can by afterwards receiving the amount detain the same from the principal. Quare—Whether a hundi made payable "to order" is, according to Hindu law and the custom of native merchants, negotiable without a written endorsement by the payee. RATBOOPRAM v. BUDDOO

[1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 98: 1 Hyde, 155

4. — Assignment of Hundi—Bills of Exchange Act, V of 1868.—A hundi which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee and accepted by him is within the terms of the Bills of Exchange Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. EAST INDIA BANK v. VULLIE GOOLWANT

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 247

5. — Proof of endorsement.—Power of endorser to sue.—Where a hundi had been endorsed to purchasers who subsequently returned it to the endorser, it was held by the Appellate Court (STEEB, J., dissentiente) that the Judge ought not to have decided against the endorser's claim because he had not proved that the note had been endorsed back to him. The Court would assume from his possession that he had a right to it, unless the contrary were shown. BEJNATH SAHOO v. BACHARAM

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 76; 5 W. R., 86]

6. — Cancellation of endorsement
—Endorsee for purposes of collection, Liability of.
—An endorsee for purposes of collection of certain hundis, under the circumstances, ordered to cancel such endorsement and to re-deliver the hundis to the endorser. Such an endorsee, not having received the amount of the hundis, was held, under the circumstances, not liable to be sued for the value thereof. GYANEE RAM v. PALER RAM . . . 2 N. W., 78

7. — Suit after endorsement—
Bill payable to depositors—Member of joint family.
—A hundi payable to the depositor is only payable to the drawer or his endorsee. When the drawer and his brother are members of an undivided Hindu family, it may be presumed that the latter is entitled to act for the former. VALIER DASS v. BUNARUSSEH ROY . . . W. R., 1864, 262

8. — Suit by endorsee against acceptor—Notice not to discount, Effect of—Bond fide holder for valuable consideration.—To an action by the endorsee against the acceptor of a hundi, the defence was a certain verbal contract between acceptor and payee of which the plaintiff had notice; and that by the custom of shroffs the defendant was exonerated by such notice. Held that it is the custom of shroffs to make enquiries of the acceptors of hundis before discounting them. That a mere notice by the acceptor not to discount does not affect his liability to a person who takes a hundi bond fide and for valuable consideration after such notice. KHOSAL CHUND v. LUCHMES CHUND

[Bourke, O. C., 151]

4. PRESENTATION.

9. — Time for presentation—
Hundi payable on arrival—Liability of drawee—Time of presentation—The custom of akhoiteej at Jeypore—S. 61 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881).—A hundi was drawn in Calcutta upon a firm at Jeypore, and made payable on arrival at the place. The hundi reached Jeypore on the 5th April, but was not presented for payment until the 29th of that month, when it was dishonoured, and soon after the drawee's firm became insolvent. Held that the hundi was presented within reasonable time, and the delay which occurred in its presentation did not absolve the drawers from liability. In considering the question whether a hundi has been presented within reasonable time, regard should be had to the situation and interests of both drawer and payee and to the distance of the place where the hundi is drawn from that where it is to be accepted. MUTTY LALL v. CHOGENMULL

[I. L. R., 11 Cal., 344]

10. — Reasonable time—
Question of time of presentation—Drawer without assets in hands of drawee.—Presentation for acceptance within reasonable time is a condition precedent to a right of action on a bill or hundi payable after sight. Where the drawer had not assets in the hands of the drawee at or subsequent to the date of the hundi,—Held that the question of presentation within reasonable time was immaterial. NINKUND ANANTAPA v. MENSHI APURAYA

[I. L. R., 10 Bom., 346]

11. — Presentation by purchaser.—A purchaser is bound to present a hundi for payment within a reasonable time. GOPAL DASS v. SERTA RAM . . . 3 Agra, 268

12. — Suit by holder and indorsee against payee and indorser—Local usage as to presentment—Usage of presentment at Bushire—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 70, 71, 75, and 137.—The plaintiff as holder and indorsee of a hundi drawn on one H of Bushire sued defendant as payee and indorser to recover Rs. 1,198-4 on a hundi which had been dishonoured by the acceptor. It was found by the Court (1) that the local usage at Bushire was to present the hundi for payment at the bank, and for the acceptor to call at the bank at due date and effect settlement; (2) that the hundi in question was presented for payment to the authorized agent of the acceptor at the bank on the due date; (3) that the said agent refused payment and informed the bank that the acceptor would not pay the hundi. It was argued that presentment at the bank was not good presentment having regard to ss. 70, 71, and 137 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881). Held that the local usage made the presentment a good presentment. IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA v. FATTEHCHAND KHUSCHAND

[I. L. R., 21 Bom., 294]

5. NOTICE OF DISHONOUR.

13. — Reasonable notice—Custom—English law.—A purchaser is bound to give reasonable notice of dishonour, that is, within the time within which it is ordinarily given according to the custom of the merchants and bankers of the district, not the immediate notice required by English law in cases of bills of exchange. GOPAL DASS v. SERTARAM

[3 Agra, 268]

14. — Custom—English law.—Although the English law of prompt notice by return of post does not apply to cases of native hundis drawn by natives upon natives and endorsed by natives, yet reasonable notice of dishonour is essential. RADHA GOBIND SHAKA v. CHUNDER NATH DASS SHAKA . . . 9 W. R., 301

15. — Hundi drawn by a manager of Hindu family—Liability of member of family—Notice of dishonour to the drawer—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 80.—The Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), in the absence of local usage to the contrary, applies to hundi. A member of a Hindu family whom it is sought to make liable by a suit on a hundi drawn by the manager of the family is entitled to urge that no notice of dishonour had been given to the manager (drawer) so as to make the latter liable under s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. KRISHNASHET v. HARI VALJI BHATYAR

[I. L. R., 20 Bom., 488]

16. — Custom—English law.—As regards notice of dishonour in connection with hundi transactions amongst natives of this country, although the strict rules of English law as to the time within which service of such notice must be made do not apply, yet the endorsee is bound to give the endorser notice within a reasonable time of his intention to come upon him, so as to enable the latter to take the necessary steps for his own protection. The question as to what is reasonable notice is to be settled by local custom; and where a party has been prejudiced by the want of such notice, this is to be taken into consideration. ANUNT RAM AGURWALLA v. NUTHALL

[21 W. R., 62]

17. — English law—Non-payment of hundi.—Although the strict rules of English law as to bills are not applicable to hundi, notice of dishonour or non-payment must be given within reasonable time to enable the drawee or endorsee to protect himself against the claims of subsequent endorsers. TULSHI SHARU v. NUBSINGRAM

[12 C. L. R., 332]

18. — Demand of a peth—Notice to endorser.—In order to charge the endorser of a dishonoured hundi, the holder must give reasonable notice of such dishonour to the endorser he seeks to charge. The demand of a peth cannot be deemed to be equivalent to a notice of dishonour. MEGRAJ JAGANNATH v. GOKALDAS MATHURADAS

[7 Bom., O. C., 137]

19. — Hundi inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp—Independent admission of loan—Suit on the original consideration.—In a suit based on the consideration independently of a hundi, it is not necessary to prove notice of dishonour. KRISHNAJI NARAYAN PARKHI v. RAJMAL MANTICHAND MARWADI

[I. L. R., 24 Bom., 360]

20. — Sufficiency of notice—Principal and agent—Custom—Delay in giving notice.—The drawers of a hundi in favour of the plaintiff at Dacca (where all the parties to the hundi lived) were held not liable on proof that they were the goustabs of the acceptor, that they had no interest in the hundi, and that, according to custom in Dacca, where the hundi was drawn and accepted, agents under such circumstances are not liable, although the agency does not appear on the hundi. They were also held discharged from liability, notice of dishonour not having been served on them till ten months after the due date of the hundi. HARI MOHAN BYSAK v. KRISHNA MOHAN BYSAK

[9 B. L. R., Ap., 1: 17 W. R., 442]

HUNDI—continued.5. NOTICE OF DISHONOUR—concluded.

21. — Promise to pay endorsed on hundi—Waiver of notice.—A promise to pay endorsed upon a hundi after it had been dishonoured, though not amounting to a waiver of notice, was held to be good and sufficient evidence that the endorser had received notice that the bill had been dishonoured. ALI v. GOPAL DASS

[13 W. R., 420]

S. C. before remand, GOPAL DASS v. ALI

[3 B. L. R., A. C., 196]

22. — Damage to parties liable by omission to give notice—Formal written notice—Suit on hundi.—Previous formal written notice of dishonour of a hundi is not necessary before suit brought, unless it can be shown that the parties charged have been prejudiced by such omission. GOVIND RAM MARWARY v. MATHOORA SABOOVA

23. — Suit on hundi—Act XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instruments Act), ss. 93, 94, 98 (c).—In the absence of any local usage to the contrary, it is just and equitable that the doctrine of notice of dishonour propounded in the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) should be applied to a hundi in the vernacular, the "reasonable time" within which such notice is to be given being determined according to the circumstances of the case. Held, therefore, that where the holder of such a hundi, which had been dishonoured, sued the prior endorsers on it, without having given them such notice and did not prove that they could not suffer damage for want of such notice, the suit must fail. MOTI LAL v. MOTI LAL

[I. L. R., 6 All., 76]

6. LIABILITY ON.

24. — Usage of shroffs—Consideration—Dishonour of hundi—Holder for value.—The plaintiff, as agent and banker of an Ajmir constituent, received a hundi for collection, and on its acceptance by the drawee, credited the Ajmir constituent with the amount as of the date when the hundi would become payable. Held that, as between the plaintiff and the Ajmir constituent, the plaintiff, upon such credit in account being given, became a holder for value. Held also that, the hundi being dishonoured at due date by the drawee, the plaintiff was justified, by the usage of shroffs, in treating the Ajmir constituent as still entitled to credit for the amount, and himself as a holder for value. Held also that, as between the Ajmir constituent and the first indorser (the defendant and appellant), the giving by the Ajmir constituent to the defendant of another hundi which was never presented in Bombay for acceptance or payment was a consideration for the endorsement by the defendant to the Ajmir constituent of the hundi sent by the latter to the plaintiff and sued on by him. MULCHAND JOHARIMAL v. 25. ———— Notice of dishonour—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 61—Presentment of hundi—Indemnity-bond.—In a suit on an indemnity-bond executed by way of collateral security by the maker of six hundis, it appeared that three of the hundis were paid, and when three which were unpaid were presented to the maker, he did not at once insist upon want of notice of dishonour or on non-presentment as a ground of discharge. Held that, since the defendant did not prove that the drawee had effects of his to meet the hundis on presentment or that he had sustained damage by reason of the want of notice of dishonour, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. SHANMUGAN v. CHINNASAMI

26. ———— Liability of drawer, acceptor, and indorsee—Separate contract—Decree against one without satisfaction.—The drawer, acceptor, and intermediate endorser of a hundi which is dishonoured are all liable to the holder, but their liability is not joint as it arises out of different contracts, and a decree obtained against any one of them without satisfaction cannot be pleaded as a bar to a suit against any other of them. ABDOOR RUHMAN v. GUNNESE LALL

27. ———— Defendants not all resident in jurisdiction—Parties—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 4—Bankruptcy of acceptor.—In a suit on a hundi payable at Calcutta, the acceptor there having become bankrupt before the hundi reached maturity, brought by the holder in the place where the hundi was drawn against the two partners of the firm that drew the hundi, and also the acceptor, who resided at the time of suit beyond the local jurisdiction of the Court passing the decree, the lower Appellate Court having dismissed the suit on the ground that the Court of first instance could not, without the sanction provided by s. 4 of Act XXIII of 1861, pass a decree against the defendant who resided beyond its jurisdiction. Held, following the English law, that it was not necessary to sue the bankrupt defendant, and that the holder of a hundi is not bound, in the event of its dishonour, to sue all the parties liable under it, but may select any one or more of them. BASANT RAM v. of the latter at Calcutta. Afterwards on her representing to B that she had lost the hundi, B granted the plaintiff a duplicate, in the body of which it was stated that if the original had been accepted before presentation of the duplicate, the latter was to become null and void. The duplicate was presented to the agent of B at Calcutta, and payment was refused on the ground that the original had been presented and accepted and paid in due time. Held that the plaintiff had no cause of action against B for non-payment of the duplicate hundi, nor for money had and received on account of the original consideration having failed. INDUR CHANDRA DUGAR v. 31. ———— Stolen hundi—Shah jog hundi endorsed to a particular person—Payment by drawee without inquiry to wrong person—Liability of drawee to lawful owner of hundi—Conversion—Trove.—On the 6th December 1893, the plaintiff at Sholapur having brought a shah jog hundi, there drawn upon the defendants in Bombay, endorsed to R and sent it by post to him for collection. In course of its transmission it was stolen, and the name of R was expunged, and another name, viz., that of D, was substituted. On the 9th December 1893, the hundi was presented for payment to the defendants in Bombay by a person giving his name as D, and the defendants paid it without inquiry as to the responsibility or position of the person to whom they paid it. The plaintiff sued the defendants for the value of the hundi. Held (1) that the defendants were guilty of conversion of the hundi, and were liable to the plaintiff, the lawful owner thereof, in trover; (2) that the hundi continued to be shah jog after being indorsed to a particular person. GANESDAS RAMNARAYAN v. 32. ———— Hundi payable at fixed date—Dishonour by non-acceptance—Cause of action—Right of suit—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881).—On 14th April 1889, the defendant at Gwalior drew a hundi for Rs 2,500 on his firm at Bombay in favour of D payable forty-five days after date. It was subsequently indorsed at Gwalior by D to the plaintiff at Cawnpore, who sent it to the Bank of Bombay at Bombay for collection. It was to become payable on the 1st June 1889, but on the 23rd April 1889 the bank presented it to the defendant's firm at Bombay for acceptance, which was refused. The bank thereupon returned it to the plaintiff at Cawnpore, and it was never presented for payment.

HUNDI—continued.6. LIABILITY ON—concluded.

In a suit brought on the hundi, the defendant contended that the hundi being payable at a fixed date, and not having been presented for payment when due, no cause of action had arisen to the plaintiff. Held (1) that dishonour by non-acceptance of a hundi payable at a fixed date gives an immediate cause of action against the drawer, and there is no need to wait until the maturity of the hundi or to present it for payment; (2) that under the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) the dishonour of a hundi by non-acceptance constitutes now, as it has always done, part of the cause of action in a suit against the drawer. RAM RAYJI JAMBHEKAR v. Hundis drawn payable at sight.—According to the usage of native bankers at Moorsheadabad, interest is claimable on hundis drawn at 111 days' sight. DUPUT SINGH DOOGAR v. JUGUT INDUR BUNWARER GORIND DER . . . 4 W R., 85

8. PROPERTY IN HUNDI AND FORGED HUNDIS.

84. ——— Property in hundi sent to agent for realization.—S R, the plaintiffs' agents in Calcutta, accepted hundis for ₹12,000 drawn upon them by a branch house of the plaintiffs' firm, and the plaintiffs at different times sent to S R hundis amounting in value to ₹11,400, with instructions to realize them, and to apply the proceeds towards payment of the ₹12,000. S R had paid ₹7,000 of this amount, and they had realized ₹6,400 out of the ₹11,400, when they stopped payment. At that time two unmatured hundis, for ₹2,500 each, remained in their hands, and these they endorsed over to the defendant after maturity in trust for their creditors. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the two hundis,—Held that the hundis, having been sent to S R for the special purpose of enabling them to meet their acceptances for ₹12,000, remained the property of the plaintiffs, subject to a lien of S R of ₹600. HARARI MULL NARAYATTA v. 85. ——— Forged hundi—Mercantile usage—Repayment to drawee by holder.—According to mercantile usage amongst Hindus, where a hundi, drawn "payable to owner" (shah jogi), is paid at maturity by the drawee to the shah or holder of the hundi, and such hundi afterwards turns out to be forged, the shah, though a bond fide holder for value, is bound to repay to the drawee the amount of such hundi with interest from the date of payment, provided that the drawee has been guilty of no laches in discovering the forgery and communicating the fact of such forgery to the shah. The shah, however, relieves himself from such liability by producing the

86. ——— Forged endorsement—Suit to recover hundi.—The plaintiffs, being holders of a hundi, sent the same to their koti in Calcutta without endorsement. The hundi was lost or stolen on the way and came into the defendants' hands as endorsees, the endorsement of the plaintiffs having been forged. The defendants, without notice of the forgery, paid full consideration for the hundi. Held on appeal, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the hundi from the defendants. Per PHACOCK, C.J.—It appeared from the evidence that the hundi in this case would pass, at any rate prior to acceptance, by delivery. GOUBSIMULL v. DHANSUK DAS
[7 B. L. R., 289 note: 16 W. R., 10 note

87. ——— Suit to recover hundi—Bond fide holder for valuable consideration.—A hundi which had been purchased by the plaintiff at Delhi for value was, he alleged, endorsed by him to the firm of R B D of Calcutta, "for realization," and sent to that firm by post. Between Delhi and Calcutta the hundi was lost or stolen, and never reached the firm of R B D. It eventually came into the hands of the defendant, bearing no endorsement to R B D, but endorsed to U D H, and by U D H. The defendant alleged that he took it in the ordinary course of business, and for valuable consideration, from the gomastah of the firm of U D H, after the acceptors to whom it had been sent for that purpose had acknowledged their acceptance in favour of the firm of U D H of Calcutta, by whom it purported to be endorsed to the defendant's firm. When presented to the acceptors for payment, it was dishonoured, the acceptors stating that they had received notice not to pay the note, as it had been stolen. On the same day the defendant gave notice of dishonour to the firm of U D H, and demanded payment, but that firm stated that their endorsement to the hundi was forged, and refused to pay. It was proved that, before taking the hundi, the defendant had sent to the acceptor's koti to ascertain if their acceptance was genuine. In a suit for the recovery of the hundi, or its value,—Held by the Court below that the endorsement of U D H was genuine, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the hundi. The defendant, having taken the hundi in the ordinary course of business and after sufficient enquiry, was entitled to retain it: this was so, notwithstanding the endorsement "for realization" on the hundi. The hundi was one which passed by delivery without endorsement, and therefore if the endorsement of U D H was forged, the defendant still had a right to the hundi. On appeal, the Court held that the endorsement to the firm of U D H was not genuine; and this being so, the fact that the defendant took the hundi in the course of business for valuable consideration, and without notice, did not give him a good title to retain it as against the plaintiff. The hundi was specially accepted, and there was nothing to show that by Hindu law such a hundi would pass as one

9. JOKHMI HUNDI.

88. ——— Equitable assignment of goods as security—Custom.—If the drawee of a jokhmi hundi refuses to accept it, and nevertheless as consignee takes possession of the goods against which it is drawn and which are referred to in it, the only remedy of the holder is against the drawer of the hundi, or the person from whom the holder bought it. The plaintiffs at N purchased, on 22nd December 1878, from L, for Rs. 4,000, a jokhmi hundi drawn in favour of plaintiffs by L upon his firm in Bombay. The hundi contained a statement that it was "drawn against" twenty-nine bales of wool shipped at Tuna, and it was made payable eight days after the safe arrival of the ship at Bombay. The plaintiffs obtained from L, at the same time, a letter addressed by him to his firm at Bombay, which contained the following passage: "Upon you a jokhmi hundi is drawn, the particulars whereof are as follows: (Rs. 4,000). The value having been received from Jadowji Gopalji, hundis for Rs. 4,000 drawn against 29 bales of sheep's wool shipped on board the Hariprasad, owner Dava Morarji, from the seaport town of Tuna . . . On the safe arrival of the vessel, do you be good enough to land the goods, and deliver the same to Jadowji Gopalji; and as to the jokhmi hundis drawn before, if in respect thereof any money has to be paid to Jadowji Gopalji, do you be good enough to pay the same." The above letter was duly presented by the plaintiffs to L's Bombay firm on the 27th December 1878. Evidence was given that at the time the plaintiffs obtained the hundi and the letter, the goods referred to had been already shipped. On the 1st January 1879, the firm of L was adjudicated insolvent by the High Court at Bombay. On the 5th January 1879, the ship arrived at Bombay with the goods in question on board, and on the 7th January the ship-owners delivered them to the Official Assignee. The plaintiffs sued the Official Assignee (as assignee of the estate and effects of L) and the shipowners to recover possession of the wool or the amount of the hundi, and contended that by the custom of Bombay the holder of a jokhmi hundi had a charge upon the goods mentioned therein, and that, in the event of the drawee failing to pay the amount of the hundi, the holder was entitled to obtain possession of the goods and realize by their sale the amount due to him upon the hundi. Plaintiff also contended that the above letter of the 22nd December 1878 operated as a valid equitable assignment of the wool to him. Held that the plaintiff, as holder of a jokhmi hundi, had no charge upon the wool in question, and could not upon this ground recover from the defendants the possession of the wool or the amount due upon the hundi; but held also, on the authority of Burn v. Carvalho, 4 M. and

HUNDI—concluded.9. JOKHMI HUNDI—concluded.

Cr., 690, that the letter of the 22nd December 1878 operated as an equitable assignment of the wool to the plaintiffs, on the safe arrival of the vessel, as a security for the payment of the hundi, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to obtain possession of the wool. JADOWJI GOPAL v. 1. CAUSING HURT.

1. ——— Nature of injury constituting "hurt"—Causing serious disability.—Causing a disability for a fortnight is punishable for voluntarily causing hurt. QUEEN v. BISHNOORAM SURMA 1 W. R., Cr., 9

2. ——— Penal Code, s. 328—"Other thing."—The words "or other thing" in s. 328 of the Penal Code must be referred to the preceding words, and be taken to mean "unwholesome or other thing," and not "other thing" simply. QUEEN v. JOTEE GHOBARE 1 W. R., Cr., 7

3. ——— Blow with umbrella.—Penal Code, ss. 95, 319.—The pain caused by a blow across the chest with an umbrella was held to be not of such a trivial character as to come within the meaning of the Penal Code, s. 95, but to be hurt under s. 319. GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL v. JOYGOPAL . 4 W. R., Cr., 4

6. ——— Causing hurt on grave provocation—Penal Code, ss. 324, 333.—Causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation is chargeable as an offence under s. 334, and not under s. 324 of the Penal Code. REG. v. BHALA CHULA . Bom., 17

7. ——— Causing death after provocation—Disease of spleen.—The prisoner, having received great provocation from his wife, pushed her so as to throw her with violence to the ground, and after she was down struck her with his open hand. She died, and on examination it appeared there were no external marks of violence on the body, but that there was disease of the spleen and that death was caused by rupture of the spleen. Held, under the circumstances, that the prisoner was guilty of causing hurt, and not of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. QUEEN v. PUNCHANUN TANTER

8. ——— Chance injury on provocation—Penal Code, ss. 319-322.—Where a wife died from a chance kick in the spleen inflicted by her husband on provocation given by the wife, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, and showing by the blow itself and by his conduct immediately afterwards that he had no intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause hurt endangering human life, Held that the husband was guilty of an offence under ss. 319 and 321 of the Penal Code, and not an offence under ss. 320 and 322. QUEEN v. 11. ——— Hurt caused to extort information of offence—Penal Code, s. 330.—A charge may be made under s. 330, Penal Code, of causing hurt for the purpose of extorting information which might lead to the detection of an offence, even if the supposed offence has not been committed. The offence which that section intended to describe is that of inducing a person by hurt to make a statement or a confession having reference to offence or misconduct; and whether that offence or misconduct has been committed is wholly immaterial. QUEEN v. When the result of a joint attack by several persons on one man is the fracture of his arm, the offence committed is grievous hurt, and not assault. QUEEN v. RAMTORTI SINGH . . . 6 W. R., Cr., 12

19. ——— Want of intention, likelihood, or knowledge that injury is likely to cause death.—When there is neither intention, knowledge, nor likelihood that the injury inflicted in an assault will or can cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide, but grievous hurt. QUEEN v. MEHA MEHA . . . 2 W. R., Cr., 38

20. ——— Want of intention to cause death—Robbery.—Where, in a case of robbery attended with death, there was no intention of causing death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the conviction was altered from voluntarily causing hurt in committing robbery to voluntarily causing grievous hurt in committing robbery. QUEEN v. CHAKOR HURER . . . 6 W. R., Cr., 16

21. ——— Grievous hurt in commission of lurking house-trespass—Penal Code, ss. 324, 457, 460.—A person who, in the commission of lurking house-trespass by night, voluntarily attempts to cause grievous hurt to the owner of the house who tries to capture him, is punishable under s. 460, and not under ss. 457 and 324 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN v. 22. ——— Conviction of grievous hurt—Constructive guilt—Abetment—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 114, 325, with 149.—Where the accused persons have been acquitted of rioting, they cannot be properly convicted of grievous hurt under s. 325 by the application of s. 149 of the Penal Code, where it has not been found that these persons or any of them were members of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object, of which grievous hurt was caused by any other member of the same assembly, or that the offence was such as each member of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. The mere presence as an abettor of any person would not, under the terms of s. 114 of the Penal Code, render him liable for the offence committed. Empress v. Chattradhari Goala, 2 Calc. W. N., 49, explained. In order to bring a person within s. 114 of the Penal Code, it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment, so that, if absent, he would have been liable to be punished as an abettor, and then to show that he was also present when the offence was committed. Queen v. Nirani, 7 W. R., Cr., 49, relied on. ABHI MISHRA v. LAOCHI NARAIN . . . I L. R., 27 Calc., 566 [4 C. W. N., 546]

23. ——— Beating a man found committing theft—Presumption.—The prisoners found a man in the act of theft, and were beating and cuffing him, when one of the witnesses for the prosecution threatened to call a chowkidar, and they released him. Two days afterwards he was found drowned. Held that there was no evidence to convict the prisoners of causing grievous hurt. All presumptions consequent on the man's body being found drowned should have been put aside, and the original assault alone considered. QUEEN v. NUNKOO DOSS . . . [2 W. R., Cr., 48]

24. ——— Driving over deaf man—Penal Code, s. 338—Negligence.—Defendant was convicted under s. 338 of the Penal Code of causing grievous hurt. The evidence showed that the defendant was being driven in a carriage to her house through the streets of the town, between the hours of 7 and 8 P.M.; that the carriage was being driven at an ordinary pace, and in the middle of the road; that the night was dark, and the carriage without lamps, but that the horse-keeper and coachman were shouting out to warn foot-passengers; that the defendant's carriage came into contact with the complainant's father, an old deaf man, and that complainant's father was thereupon knocked down, run over, and killed. Held, upon a reference, that the question for the Court was whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently and rashly directed by the accused, and that there was no such evidence. The conviction was accordingly quashed. ANONYMOUS . . . 6 Mad., Ap., 32

25. ——— Grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation—Penal Code, s. 335.—Causing grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation is punishable under s. 335 of the Penal Code, without any intention or knowledge of likelihood of causing such hurt. QUEEN v. UMBICA TANTINEZ . . . [4 W. R., Cr., 21]

QUEEN v. BHADOO PORAMANICK

[4 W. R., Cr., 23]

26. ——— Hurt caused in house-breaking—Penal Code, ss. 459, 460.—Ss. 459 and 460 of the Penal Code provide for a compound offence, the governing incident of which is that either a "lurking house-trespass" or "house-breaking" must have been completed, in order to make a person who accompanies that offence either by causing grievous hurt or attempt to cause death or grievous hurt responsible under those sections. The sections must be construed strictly, and they are not applicable where the principal act done by the accused person amounts to no more than a mere attempt to commit lurking house-trespass or house-breaking. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ISMAIL KHAN . . . I L. R., 8 All., 649

27. ——— Charge of grievous hurt—Committal for trial.—A prisoner charged with the offence of causing "grievous hurt" should be committed for trial to the Sessions Court. REG. v. AZTA BIN DADOBA . . . 1 Bom., 101

28. ——— Child-wife—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Causing death by a rash and negligent act—Rashness and negligence—Penal Code, ss. 304, 304A, 325, 338—Husband and wife.—The prisoner, a fully developed adult man, was charged with causing the death of his wife, a girl aged about 11 years and 3 months, who had not attained puberty. The death was caused by hæmorrhage from a rupture of the vagina caused by the prisoner having sexual intercourse with the girl. For the defence it was alleged that he had had sexual intercourse with the girl on several previous occasions without injury to her, and there were circumstances in the case which showed that this was possible, and even not improbable, though the medical evidence was to the effect that, if such intercourse had previously taken place, the penetration was probably not so complete or with so much sexual vigour as on the occasion when the injury was caused. The medical evidence was further to the effect that the girl had not attained puberty, and was immature and wholly unfit for sexual intercourse; that under such circumstances sexual intercourse between the prisoner and the girl was likely to be dangerous to her, and to cause injuries more or less serious according to the degree of penetration effected. The prisoner was charged with (a) culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304 of the Penal Code; (b) causing death by doing a rash and negligent act under s. 304A; (c) voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s. 325; and (d) causing grievous hurt by doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others under s. 338. Held that, in such a case, when the girl is a wife and above the age of 10 years, and when therefore the law of rape does not apply, it by no means follows that the law regards the wife as a thing made over to be the absolute property of her husband, or as a person outside the protection of the criminal law; that no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down that sexual intercourse with a girl under a certain age must be regarded as dangerous and punishable, or over that age as safe and right, but that each case must be judged according to its own individual circumstances; that in such a case the jury have to consider and say whether under the particular circumstances of the case, having regard to the physical condition of the girl, and to the intention, the knowledge, the degree of rashness or negligence with which the accused is shown to have acted on the occasion in question, he has brought himself within any of the provisions of the criminal law. Held further that, if the jury were of opinion (a) that the act of the prisoner caused the death of the girl, that is to say, that the act of cohabitation on the part of the prisoner had the effect of rupturing the vagina and so causing the hæmorrhage which led to her death; (b) that the act of cohabitation between a fully developed man like the prisoner and an immature girl like his wife was itself a thing likely to lead to dangerous consequences; (c) that that act was one of such a character as to indicate a reckless indifference to the welfare of the girl or a want of reasonable consideration about what the prisoner was doing, one which the husband of the girl, if he had had a reasonable regard to her welfare, and had exercised reasonable thought as to the act he contemplated doing, would have abstained from doing, they would be justified in finding that the prisoner caused the death of the girl by a rash and negligent act. Under no system of law with which Courts have to do in this country, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, or that framed under British rule, has it ever been the law that a husband has the absolute right to enjoy the person of his wife without regard to the question of safety to her. QUEEN-EMPEROR v. HUBBER MORUN MYTHIE

29. ——— Proof of grievous hurt—
Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 320 and 326—Remaining in hospital for twenty days—Presumption.—The accused were charged with causing grievous hurt. The Joint Sessions Judge, relying apparently on evidence that the injured person remained in a hospital for the space of twenty days, drew from that circumstance alone the inference that he was during that period unable to follow his ordinary pursuits, and convicted the accused under s. 326 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860). Held, reversing the convictions, that in the absence of any evidence that the injured person was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits during the space of twenty days, such an inference could not legally be drawn. Before a conviction can be passed for the offence of grievous hurt, one of the injuries defined in s. 320 of the Penal Code must be strictly proved, and the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule that a penal statute must be construed strictly. Proof of being in a hospital for the space of twenty days cannot be taken as equivalent to proof of grievous hurt. QUEEN-EMPEROR v. VASTA CHELA

Fraud of guardian.—Where a wife (a minor) sought to enforce an ante-nuptial settlement as against the creditors of her husband, the settlement having been made and negotiated on her behalf by her father as her guardian; and the father, under such circumstances, had made a contract for her which was void as against third persons, on the ground of public policy.—Held that such a contract could no more be enforced by the minor against those third persons than it could be enforced by her, had she been an adult and made the contract herself. It is unnecessary, in order to avoid an ante-nuptial settlement as against a minor wife and her children, where the conduct of the father who brought about the marriage has been shown to be fraudulent, to show that the minor was a party to the fraud. POGOSE v. DELHI AND LONDON BANKING CO.

[I. L. R., 10 Cal., 951

3. ——— Wife's equity to a settlement—Illegitimacy—Right to bastard's estate—Execution of decree.—M, the widow and administratrix of a bastard who had died intestate and without issue, received a letter in 1841 from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, stating that they did not deem it expedient to take any steps for the assertion of the rights of the claim with regard to her late husband's estate. Previous to this, M had obtained possession of that estate, and two months before the receipt of the letter she had contracted a second marriage. No settlement was made upon the marriage, and since the marriage her second husband had had the management of the property. In execution of a decree against the husband, his right, title, and interest in and to a portion of the property were put up for sale, and purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's right to possession was disputed by M, who contended that her husband took no interest in the two-thirds of the property which went to the Crown which could be attached and sold in execution. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish her rights over the property.—Held that the rights of her husband extended over the whole estate and were rights which could be seized in execution and sold. M's husband being without property and in great difficulties, and subsisting only on a life-pension of £118 a month, M was entitled to a settlement. *TOOLSEN-MONEY DOSSER v. 4. ——— Deed of separation—Agreement not to molest husband—Right of suit.—A suit is not maintainable by a wife for an allowance from her husband on an agreement, for which the sole consideration is a stipulation that the wife is not to communicate with or molest her husband, such stipulation falling within the general rule that a deed of separation entered into by husband and wife without the intervention of trustees is void. HUGHES v. HUGHES. . . . 16 W. R., 250

5. ——— Principal and agent—Agency—Authority of wife to pledge husband's credit.—Held that the liability of a husband for his wife's debts depends on the principles of agency, and the husband can only be liable when it is shown that he has expressly or impliedly sanctioned what the wife has done. In a suit by a creditor to recover from his debtor and her husband the amount of money lent by the plaintiff to the former on her notes of hand; it appeared that the defendants had always lived together, that the wife had an allowance wherewith to meet the household expenditure and all her personal expenses, and that the money had been borrowed without the husband's knowledge, and not to meet any emergent need, but to pay off previous debts, and had been raised by successive borrowings over a considerable period, the debts having increased by high rates of interest. It was also found that it had not been shown that the plaintiff looked to the husband's credit, or that the husband had ever previously paid his wife's debts for her. Held that, under these circumstances, no agency on the wife's part for her husband had been established, and that the husband was therefore not liable to the claim. GIRDHARI LAL v. CRAWFORD 1 L. R., 9 All., 147

6. ——— Plea of coverture—Separate property of wife—Suit on promissory note—Personal decree.—The defendant, a married woman living with her husband, both domiciled in British India and resident in Calcutta, where they had been married on 21st May 1866, and having property to which she was absolutely entitled under the provisions of the Succession Act, signed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff for a debt due by her to the plaintiff, at the same time giving a verbal promise to pay the amount out of her own property. In a suit on the promissory note, in which the husband and wife were made parties, the wife pleaded her coverture. Held that she was liable to pay the amount of the promissory note out of her own property, and the Court would, if necessary, make a personal decree against her. ARCHER v. WATKINS

7. ——— Divorce—Suit for nullity of marriage—Suit by wife against husband—Costs of wife—Alimony—Maintenance—Suit between Mahomedans—Mahomedan law.—The English law which makes the husband in divorce proceedings liable prima facie to the wife's costs, except when she is possessed of sufficient separate property, does not apply to divorce proceedings between Mahomedans. A wife sued her husband for dissolution of marriage (both parties being Mahomedans) on the ground of his impotency and malformation. An interlocutory order was made by the Court adjourning the further hearing of the suit for one year, in order that the parties might resume cohabitation for that period. The husband desired to carry out the order of the Court and was anxious that his wife should live with him; she, however, refused to do so, and only paid occasional visits to his house. The suit was subsequently dismissed with costs. The wife appealed, and subsequently applied for alimony until the disposal of the appeal. Held that, having regard to the conduct of the wife, she was not entitled to alimony. By Mahomedan law a husband's duty to maintain his wife is conditional upon her obedience, and he is not bound to maintain her if she disobeys him by refusing to live with him or otherwise. A v. 13. ——— Legacy—Parol claim with wife's legacy.—C, a married woman, was entitled, under her father's will, to certain money "absolutely for her sole use and benefit, free from the control, debts, and liabilities of her husband," and under such will such money was payable to her "on her sole and personal receipt." While so entitled, C borrowed from her husband the purchase-money of certain real property, on the understanding that she would pay him back such money when she obtained her legacy. The conveyance of such property was made to C, but not to her separate use. C subsequently assigned her legacy by sale, and out of the money obtained by such assignment repaid her husband the purchase-money of the property purchased. Held that the conversion by C of her legacy did not

property purchased with legacy—Sale in execution of decree—Right of purchaser.—C, a married woman, was entitled, under her father's will, to certain money "absolutely for her sole use and benefit, free from the control, debts, and liabilities of her husband," and under such will such money was payable to her "on her sole and personal receipt." While so entitled, C borrowed from her husband the purchase-money of certain real property, on the understanding that she would pay him back such money when she obtained her legacy. The conveyance of such property was made to C, but not to her separate use. C subsequently assigned her legacy by sale, and out of the money obtained by such assignment repaid her husband the purchase-money of the property purchased. C and her husband were married before Act X of 1866 came into force, and had acquired an Indian domicile. Held that, even if English law were applicable in the case, and any interest in the property purchased passed to C's husband, it passed, in view of the agreement between her and her husband, on an implied contract that he would hold the property in trust for her, and that, where such property was purchased at a sale in the execution of a decree against J as his property, with notice that such property was claimed by C as her separate property, such purchase did not defeat the title of C. *BREKESFORD v. Married Woman's Property Act (III of 1874), ss. 7 and 8—Succession Act (X of 1866), s. 4—Action for trover—Wife against husband.—The plaintiff was, at the time of her marriage in 1870, possessed in her own right of certain articles of household furniture, given to her by her mother. Since January 1875 she had lived separate from her husband, but the furniture remained in his house. In February 1875 her husband mortgaged the property to B, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent. In June 1875 one K C B, a creditor, obtained a decree against the husband and B, in execution of which he seized the furniture as the property of the husband, and it remained in Court subject to the seizure. In July 1875 the plaintiff instituted a suit in her own name in trover to recover the articles of furniture or their value from her husband, on the ground that they were her separate property, and in August 1875 she preferred a claim in her own name to the property under s. 88 of Act IX of 1860. It was found on the facts that the furniture was the property of the plaintiff. The husband and wife were persons subject to the provisions of the Succession Act, s. 4, and the Married Woman's Property Act, 1874. Held that, under s. 7 of the latter Act, the suit was maintainable against the husband. Held also that the judgment for the plaintiff in the suit, to recover the furniture or its value from the husband, could not, without satisfaction, have the effect of vesting the property in the husband from the time of the conversion, and therefore the claim under Act IX of 1860 was also maintainable. Brinsmead v. Harrison, L. R., 6 C. P., 584, followed. HARRIS v. HARRIS. HARRIS v. KOYLAS CHUNDER BANDOPADIA

Execution of decrees against separate property of wife—Domicile—Agency.—Act III of 1874 (The Married Woman's Property Act) applies to persons having an English domicile. Accordingly, the separate property of a married woman (whose husband's domicile is English) is alone bound by all debts, obligations, and engagements incurred by her in the management of a business carried on by her alone, and execution of any decree obtained against her in respect of such business should be limited to her separate property. The principle that the wife is impliedly carrying on business as the agent of the husband is excluded by the provisions of Act III of 1874. ALLUMUDDY v. BRAM

Escheat—Non-assertion of claim by Crown—Estoppel.—M, the widow and administratrix of a bastard who had died intestate and without issue, received a letter in 1841 from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury stating that they did not deem it expedient to take any steps for the assertion of the rights of the Crown with regard to her late husband's estate. Previous to this, M had obtained possession of that estate, and two months before the receipt of the letter she had contracted a second marriage. No settlement was made upon this marriage, and since the time of the marriage, M's second husband had had the exclusive management of the property. In execution of a decree against the husband, his right, title, and interest in and to a portion of the property were put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's right to possession was disputed by M, who contended that her husband took no interest in the two-thirds of the property which went to the Crown which could be attached and sold in execution. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish her rights over the property, Held that the Crown would be estopped by the line adopted by the Commissioners of the Treasury in 1841 from asserting its claim to the two-thirds; and that M had a good title to the whole estate even as against the Crown. *TOOLSEEMONEY DOSSES v. Parties—Administrator General's Act, XXIV of 1867, s. 15—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 224.

—The plaintiff applied for probate of the will of one E D, to be granted to them as executor and executrix thereof. The Administrator General had entered a caveat and appeared to oppose the application. The petition for probate was therefore ordered to be treated as a plaint, both parties to file a written statement, and the case was set down to be heard. At the hearing it appeared E D was illegitimate, and the issue for trial was whether the document was or was not her will. Held that the Administrator General would be entitled to letters of administration under s. 15, Act XXIV of 1867, and that it was not necessary to make the Government a party to the suit. Scoble—The Administrator General would have been entitled to apply for letters of administration under s. 224 of Act X of 1865. *DE MELLO v. — (IX of 1869), ss. 24, 25, 27—Appeal in criminal case—Failure to make payment—Sanction of Collector and discretion of.—There were strong grounds for urging that the Legislature intended that convictions under ss. 24 and 25, Act IX of 1869, should be summarily disposed of by the Magistrate, but the Court was not prepared to hold that the right of appeal was taken away. No jurisdiction was given to the Judge to reverse a conviction under these sections because he may regard it as one of hardship, nor had he to determine whether or not the failure to pay was in pursuance of an intention to avoid payment or not. By failing to make payment within the time specified in the notice, the tax-payer was guilty of an offence within the terms of s. 25, and subsequent payment did not take the case out of the provisions of that section. To render such a conviction valid, it must be shown that the prosecution was instituted at the instance of the Collector, and the mere sending on the tehsildar's report with an expression of the Collector's general desire to prosecute defaulters cannot be held tantamount to the institution of a prosecution at the instance of the Collector. The provisions of s. 27 seem to imply that the Collector ought in each case to exercise his discretion as to whether a prosecution should be instituted. QUEEN v. CHEIT RAM

(d) of that section, to show that the death actually occurred on his land, when the circumstances disclosed show that a body has been found under circumstances denoting that the death was sudden, unnatural, or suspicious; the finding of the body being a fact from which a Court might reasonably infer, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the death took place there. Held (per MITTAR, J.)—It is necessary, to secure a conviction in the latter case, to prove that the death took place or occurred in the village or on the land of the accused, and the finding of a body there does not of itself afford that proof. MATURI MISSE v. 1. ——— Interim injunction—Principles on which it is granted.—The Court, in granting an ad interim injunction, will first see that there is a bona fide contention between the parties, and then on which side, in the event of obtaining a successful result to the suit, will be the balance of inconvenience if the injunction do not issue, bearing in mind the principle of retaining immovable property in status quo. On those principles an

Injunction was granted to restrain the defendants from "selling, alienating, or otherwise disposing of" certain houses, the subject of a suit, in which the plaintiff, claiming under the will of his father, sought to set aside proceedings in execution taken by an executor (under whom the defendants claimed) after the death, but before the grant of probate of the will of the deceased, and by which proceedings the executor had seized the houses in satisfaction of his own debt. GOMES v. CARTER. 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 411

2. — Injunction against person out of jurisdiction of Court—Injunction to restrain marriage of minor pending application for guardianship—Injunction against person not party to proceedings.—During the pendency of an application for guardianship of a minor girl it was alleged on behalf of the applicant, the mother, that an improper marriage was going to be performed by the father and an injunction was prayed for to restrain various persons (including a person who was not a party to the proceeding and who was not within the jurisdiction of the Court) from marrying or allowing the marriage of the minor. The lower Court granted the injunction. Held that the mere fact that a person resides outside the jurisdiction of the Court is not per se sufficient to prevent the Court from granting an injunction to restrain him from committing an act in such a case as this. HARENDRA NATH CHOWDHRY v. BRINDA RANI DASGI [2 C. W. N., 521]

3. — Power to make order for injunction—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92—Court in which suit is pending—Jurisdiction.—Where a Court has no jurisdiction to make an order, it can have no jurisdiction to modify such order. It was not lawful for a District Court, under s. 92 of Act VIII of 1859, to issue an injunction to stay waste, etc., or to appoint a receiver or manager, in respect of property in dispute, in a suit pending in a subordinate Court. The District Judge might withdraw the suit from the subordinate Court to the District Court under s. 6 of the Code, and then make orders in accordance with the terms of s. 92. Semble—A Court having jurisdiction to make orders under s. 92 had no right to make such orders without some evidence that the property in dispute in the suit was in danger of being wasted, damaged, or alienated by any party to the suit. DHUNDIRAM SANTURAM v. CHANDA NARAI. 2 Bom., 108; 2nd Ed., 96

4. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92.—S. 92, Act VIII of 1859, applies to a case where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant in possession is likely to endamage or make away with any property in dispute in the suit, and empowers the Court in such a case to issue an injunction to the defendant to refrain from the particular act complained of, and in case of necessity to appoint a receiver or manager of so much of the property only as is in dispute. JOYNARAIN GERRA v. ICHAMOTE DASSER. 13 W. R., 80

6. — Expression of intention to take attached property—Ground for granting injunction.—In a suit to recover a specific sum of money which had been attached by the Magistrate where defendant expressed his intention to take the money for the purpose of investing it in trade, Held that defendant's admission was sufficient evidence to show that the money was in danger of being alienated within the meaning of s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. GOLUCK CHUNDER GOHO v. MOHIM CHUNDER GHOSH 13 W. R., 95

7. — Injunction as to property. Duration of—Receiver.—The power of a Court to attach property and to appoint a receiver extends only to the better management or custody of any property which is in dispute, and ceases when the suit comes to an end. An injunction in respect of property cannot be maintained after a claim is dismissed, or pending an appeal. MOHROODDEEN v. AHMED HOSSEIN. 14 W. R., 384

8. — An injunction could not be issued under s. 92, Code of Civil Procedure, on a mere allegation that the defendant wished to realize debts by bringing actions in Court, without proof of an intention of waste, damage, or alienation. PROSSUNO MOYER DASSER v. WOOMA MOYER DASSER. 14 W. R., 409

10. — Stay of sale.—The plaintiffs, who were in possession of certain premises, brought a suit to restrain the defendant from selling a share in them which he had attached in execution of a decree upon a mortgage to him of that share, and to set aside the deed of mortgage. According to the plaintiff's case, they (the plaintiffs) were in possession under a decree of Court obtained upon a mortgage executed to them by the executor of the will of the last proprietor under a power contained in the will, and the mortgagors to the defendant, who were the brother and the son of the testator, had no interest in the property at the time of their mortgage to the defendant. 11. — Restraint of execution of decree—Family dwelling-house—Suit for partition.—A obtained a decree against B and others (Hindus), on a title of purchase from them, for possession of an undivided moiety of a dwelling-house, to the remaining moiety of which C (a Hindu) alleged he was jointly entitled, and that he and his family were in possession. On A's proceeding to obtain execution of his decree, C brought a suit, alleging that A had obtained no title under his purchase, and praying for partition of the property. On application for an interim injunction to restrain A from executing his decree pending the partition suit, the Court granted the application. ANANT-NATH DEY v. MACKINTOSH . 6 B. L. R., 571

12. — Stay of execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92.—The purchaser of a share of a decree who has failed in the endeavour to get the Court executing it to put him upon the record for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the decree has no right to an injunction to prevent the decree-holder from executing the whole decree without regard to the sale, even if the purchase is made on behalf of the judgment-debtor; he could only get a right to an injunction of the kind if the sale amounted to a release from the decree-holder to the judgment-debtor from his liability under the decree. ROHIMCH-NISSA v. LEAKUT ALI KHAN . 22 W. R., 506

13. — Stay of sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92.—Certain immoveable property was attached in execution of a decree obtained by L against N. A claim was thereupon put in by S, but his claim was refused, and he brought a suit as provided by s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, against L to establish his right, and applied for and obtained an injunction under s. 92 restraining L from proceeding to execute his decree against the property in dispute. N was subsequently made a party to the suit under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859. From the order granting the injunction L appealed to the High Court. Held that this was not a proper case for the issue of an injunction under s. 92. There was nothing to show that the property in dispute was in danger of being wasted, damaged, or alienated by L, nor was the property in his possession. The proper course would have been for S to have applied by petition for a postponement of the sale, the attachment continuing. The Court ordered the injunction to be dissolved, and that an order should be entered on the execution proceedings staying the sale pending S's suit, leaving it open to L, in case there should be undue delay, to make application to the Court for an immediate sale. LUTCHVEPUT SINGH v. under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code, without directing notice of the application for injunction to be issued to the other side and its order directing stay of sale of property in execution was passed ex-parte, without the other side being given an opportunity to show cause.—Held that the order was irregular. Where ancestral property was attached in execution of a decree, and a son of the judgment-debtor instituted a suit to establish his right to the property and made an application for a temporary injunction directing stay of sale pending the decision of the suit.—Held that, inasmuch as what was advertised to be sold was the rights and interests of the plaintiff's father in the property, and it could not be said that the property was being "wrongfully sold in execution of a decree," and the application on the face of it disclosed no sufficient ground to warrant an order under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code being made as prayed, the temporary injunction ought not to have been granted. AMOLAK RAM v. SANTU SINGH I L. R., 7 All., 550

15. — Notice under s. 494—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 492.—The appellant took a lease of certain lands below Porosh-nath Hill and commenced manufacturing hogs' lard thereupon. The plaintiffs, who belong to the Jain community, applied for an injunction restraining the said manufacture on the ground that it wounded their religious prejudices. The Deputy Commissioner, without any notice to the opposite party, granted the injunction on the ground that the matter was urgent in connection with offending religious prejudices and causing rioting. Held that an injunction should not issue in the absence of the opposite party without strong and grave reasons. That the Deputy Commissioner very erroneously applied the full powers of an injunction for purposes relating rather to his executive than to his judicial functions. Freeman v. McArthur, 2 Tay. and Bell., 25, approved of. BAND-DAM v. DRUMPUT SINGH 1 O. W. N., 420

16. — Injunction in one suit pending appeal in another suit—Interim injunction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 492, 546.—A brought a suit and obtained a decree against B on a mortgage-bond in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, which decree was confirmed by the High Court on appeal. A then applied for execution. In the execution-proceedings the sons of B intervened claiming a portion of the properties attached; this claim was dismissed, and the sons of B brought a regular suit before the same Subordinate Judge to have their rights to the property declared, and obtained an interim injunction restraining A from executing his decree pending the decision of their suit. This suit was dismissed, and the sons of B appealed to the High Court. A again applied for execution of his mortgage-decree, whereupon the sons of B applied for a further injunction restraining A from executing his decree pending their appeal to the High Court: this application was granted. Held that the Subordinate Judge had no right to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree

17. — Injunction to stay sale pending suit to establish title—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 492—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92—Superintendence of High Court under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, 1882.—A claim by B to certain property which had been attached by B in the course of execution-proceedings in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge of Dacca having been rejected, B instituted a suit in the Court of the second Subordinate Judge to establish his title to the property. In that suit he applied to the Court in which his suit was brought for an injunction under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code to stay the sale of the property attached by B in the execution-proceedings; but that application was rejected, and B thereupon applied for and obtained from the Court of the first Subordinate Judge an order staying the sale of the attached property until the hearing of the suit brought by him to establish his right to it. Held, in an application under s. 622 of the Code to set the latter order aside, that s. 492 of the Code of 1882 has, and was intended to have, a wider application than s. 92 of Act VIII of 1859 had, and provides a remedy where property is "in danger of being wrongfully sold;" if the circumstances justified it, an order could have been obtained under that section from the Court of the second Subordinate Judge to stay the sale. There being this alteration in the law, and such a remedy provided, and no express provision in the Code for stay of execution by a Court executing a decree on the application of a third party, the order of the first Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, and should be set aside. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BROJENDRA KUMAR RAI CHOWDHURI. 18. — Contradictory affidavits—Irreparable injury—Letters Patent, 1862 and 1865—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 92 and 94—Appealable order.—The plaintiffs, being in possession of a certain mud dock used for docking and repairing vessels and being threatened by the defendants with a suit to eject them therefrom, sued for specific performance of an alleged agreement between themselves and the defendants, under which they were, on certain terms, entitled to the use and occupation of the dock until the repairs of two of their vessels were completed; and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from ejecting them until the completion of the repairs. In support of an application for an interim injunction to restrain the defendants from taking proceedings to eject the plaintiffs until their suit had been heard, the affidavits of the plaintiffs stated that on the faith of the agreement one of their steamers had been docked and taken to pieces; that the repairs could not be finished for a considerable time, and that the vessel could not be removed from the dock without great loss and irreparable injury to them. The affidavits of the defendants denied the making of the agreements alleged by the plaintiffs, and set forth another agreement, under which they alleged the plaintiffs had been in possession of the dock, and which agreement having come to an end, they were entitled to eject the plaintiffs; they did not deny the loss to the plaintiffs which would be the result of moving the vessel before the repairs were completed, nor did they allege any delay in making the repairs, but they submitted that such loss would be the consequence of the plaintiffs' own act in docking their vessel without any final agreement having been come to between the parties. The dock was situated in the district of Hooghly, and the defendants' suit for possession, unless transferred to the High Court, would be tried in the Hooghly Court. There were facts which, in the opinion of the Court, went to show that the plaintiffs had acted bona fide. Held (per MANNING, J.) on the above facts that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs' statements, if true, raised a fair and substantial question for decision as to the rights of the parties, and looking to the inconvenience of allowing the same matter to be litigated simultaneously in different Courts between the same parties, the plaintiffs were entitled to an interim injunction restraining the defendants from bringing their suit until the plaintiffs' suit was heard. Semble—An interim injunction may issue, although there is a contradiction on the facts. On appeal the Court was of opinion that, under the circumstances, there was an equity which entitled the plaintiffs to be kept in quiet and undisturbed possession of the dock until the repairs were completed, and confirmed the order for an interim injunction, but modified it by restraining the defendants not from bringing their suit, but merely from executing any decree they might obtain therein until the plaintiffs should have had a reasonable time to complete the repairs of their vessel. Although by the Letters Patent of 1865 the provisions of Act VIII of 1859 were not expressly made applicable to the High Court, as was done by the Letters Patent of 1862, semble—the order granting the injunction was an order under s. 92, Act VIII of 1859, and therefore an appeal lay under s. 94. MORAN v. 19. — Suit for specific performance of agreement to give in marriage—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 92, 93.—Ss. 92 and 93 of Act VIII of 1859 are not applicable to a suit for specific performance of a contract to give in marriage, and the Court will not grant an interim injunction to restrain the defendant from making another marriage with a third person. Such a penalty must not be read into s. 493, which provides otherwise for the breach of an injunction granted under s. 492. DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. RAM NARAIN I. L. R., 9 All., 497

22. — Civil Procedure

Code, 1882, s. 492—"Wrongfully" sold in execution of decree.—An objection made under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code to the attachment in execution of a decree of a mortgage-bond of which the objector claimed to be the assignee from the judgment-debtors under an instrument dated prior to the attachment was disallowed; and the objector then brought two suits against the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors, in which he claimed (a) a declaration of his right to the bond and (b) to recover a sum of money from the judgment-debtors on the basis of the assignment. The first Court dismissed both suits, on the ground that the alleged assignment was collusive transaction entered into after the attachment between the objector and the judgment-debtors for the purpose of defeating the attachment. Pending an appeal to the High Court, the objector applied to that Court for a temporary injunction under s. 492 of the Code restraining the decree-holder from bringing the bond to sale in execution of the decree. Held that, although in such cases the provisions of s. 492 should be applied with the greatest care, one of the objects of the Legislature in passing that section was to guard as far as possible against multiplicity of suits, and as many complications probably resulting in further litigation were likely to arise if the decree-holder were allowed to proceed with the execution-sale, and no practical injury to any one would be caused by restraining her from so doing until the decision of the appeal, a temporary injunction should be granted, subject to security being given by the appellant. KIRPA DAYAL v. 2. SPECIAL CASES.(a) ALIENATION BY WIDOW.

24. — Interim injunction, Grounds for continuing to hearing—Consent of next reversioner—Rights of remote reversioners.—A Hindu died, leaving a widow and also leaving A, his immediate reversionary heir, and B and C, more remote reversionary heirs. The widow obtained a certificate to collect debts, but such certificate did not empower her to deal with Government securities. D instituted a suit against the widow on a promissory note alleged to have been executed in his favour by her late husband, and obtained a decree. A then instituted a suit against the widow and D to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud and collusion. This suit was compromised by A's surrendering up his reversionary interest to the widow for a consideration. B and C now sued the widow and D and A for the purpose of having the first-mentioned decree set aside, for a declaration that the decree on the compromise was inoperative to establish or confirm the fraudulent decree, or to enlarge the powers of the widow to deal with the Government securities, and obtained an interim injunction. Held that, apart from the question as to whether an alienation by a widow and next reversioner without the consent of subsequent reversioners is binding on them, which question the Court was prepared to answer in the negative, it would, under the circumstances of the case, be an abuse of the discretion of the Court not to continue the injunction until the hearing, when the truth or falsity of the charges made by the plaintiffs could be investigated on oral evidence. GOPINATH MOOKERJEE v. 28. — Restraining co-sharer from cultivating indigo without consent—Agreement not to grow indigo.—The Court refused to issue an injunction commanding a co-sharer in a certain village not to cultivate the ijuali land thereof without the consent of his co-sharers, or until the separation of his share by a butwarrah, because of alleged interference with the rights of the said co-sharers, holding that the remedy lay in an action for damages. CROWDY v. INDER ROY . . . 18 W. R., 408

29. — Interim injunction—Injunction to restrain adoption—Pract'ce.—A. a Hindu, died childless, possessed of moveable and immoveable property. After his death, disputes arose between his widow (the defendant) and his father and brother. These disputes were settled by an agreement, one of the terms of which was that the widow (the defendant) should not adopt a son, and that certain property which she was to have during her life should, after her death, go to her brother-in-law P. In 1872 P died, leaving his son, the plaintiff, him surviving. On the 25th August 1888, the plaintiff filed this suit, alleging that the defendant, in violation of the agreement, was about to adopt a son and praying for an injunction. On presenting the plaint, he applied for an interim injunction, alleging that the defendant intended to adopt a son the next day (Sunday, 26th August). The Court refused the interim injunction. ASSUR PURSHOTAM v. RATANBAI . . . I L R., 18 Bom., 59

30. — Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 20, 21, 57—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 59—Contract for personal service—Contract for more than three years.—The defendant signed an agreement in England with a railway company, whereby he contracted to serve the company exclusively for four years in India under a penalty of £110. The defendant, having come to India at the expense of the company and served it for two years, left its service for that of another employer, alleging that he had not been fairly treated by a locomotive superintendent. Held that the defendant had no right to rescind the agreement, and the plaintiff company was entitled to an interlocutory injunction restraining defendant from serving others on the terms that the plaintiff company should

31. — Agreement not to work for a rival tradesman Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 22, 54, and 57—Agreement made when under criminal charge—Discretion of Court in granting specific performance—Negative agreement—Damages—Form of decree.—The plaintiff was a milliner carrying on business in Bombay, and the defendant was in his employment up to the year 1890. In that year he left the plaintiff's service, and the plaintiff alleged that at the time he left it he was indebted to the plaintiff for moneys not accounted for and also in respect of loans made to him. The plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings in the Police Court against the defendant for criminal breach of trust, and procured a warrant for his arrest. The defendant surrendered, and at the time of the agreement hereafter mentioned the proceedings in this matter were going on. The defendant was out on bail, and was then in the service of a rival milliner B. On the 1st February 1893, an agreement in writing was made between the plaintiff and the defendant whereby the defendant agreed as follows:—(1) to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim; (2) to enter plaintiff's service as cutter and to serve him for ten years from the date of agreement; (3) to serve plaintiff honestly; (4) in case plaintiff was obliged to dismiss him for some "fault," then until the expiration of the said period of ten years, the defendant should not carry on the business of a cutter or tailor either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as partner or servant of another, and in case he should do so, the plaintiff should be at liberty to stop him. On the 15th February 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust against the defendant was dismissed, the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it. The plaintiff subsequently called upon the defendant to enter his employment in accordance with the agreement, but the defendant refused, and remained in the service of B. The plaintiff therefore filed this suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor for ten years from the date of the agreement. Held, dismissing the suit, that the parties were not really on equal terms, and that in the exercise of the discretion permitted to the Court by s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) the injunction should be refused. CALYANJI HANJIVAN v. NARSI TRICUM [I L R., 18 Bom., 708]

Held, in the same case on appeal, that the lower Court was right in refusing either to grant specific performance of the agreement or an injunction against the defendant, but that, inasmuch as it had refused an injunction on the ground that pecuniary compensation was the plaintiff's proper remedy, it ought not to have dismissed the suit, but ought either itself to have awarded damages, or to have ordered an inquiry as to damages. The plaintiff being held to be entitled to a remedy, the appropriate remedy should be awarded. The Appellate Court accordingly passed a decree against the defendant, and awarded

32. — Contract for personal service—Contract not to practise as physician. A agreed on certain terms to become assistant for three years to B, who was a physician and surgeon practising at Zanzibar. The letter which stated the terms which B offered and which (as the Court found A accepted, contained the words "the ordinary clause against practising must be drawn up." At the end of a year a disagreement took place and A ceased to act as B's assistant and began to practise in Zanzibar on his own account. B sued for an injunction to restrain him. Held that B was entitled to an injunction restraining A from practising in Zanzibar on his own account during the period of three years. CHARLES-WORTH v. (c) COLLECTION OF RENTS.

33. — Suit to restrain collection of rents—Damage, Proof of.—An injunction to restrain the defendant from collecting, with at any title, from the raiyats of the plaintiff's estate, two annas rent over and above the full sixteen annas in the rupee, may be granted without proof of actual damage. NADIRJUMMA CHOWDHRY v. (e) EXECUTION OF DECREE.

35. — Stay of execution of decree—Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).—An injunction did not, under the law as it stood before the Specific Relief Act, 1877, lie against the decree-holder, by assignment or otherwise to restrain him from executing a decree granted to him by a Court exercising co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Court in which the injunction was applied for, on the ground that the proceedings by which the decree was obtained against the person applying for the injunction were altogether illegal. The cases in which injunctions were granted by the Courts of Chancery in England against proceedings in other Courts rested upon the assumption that the rights of the parties could not be enquired into, except through the Courts of Chancery, and are therefore not applicable to India. Injunctions to stay proceedings under the Specific Relief Act can only be granted in cases where the Court in which the proceedings are to

36. — Restraining decree-holder from executing decree improperly or illegally obtained—Order substituting judgment-debtor—Sale or transfer of denu-powna.—A, the proprietor of an indigo concern, which comprised a putni talukh, after mortgaging the entire concern to B, allowed the putni talukh to be sold for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819; C, the darpattidar of the talukh, whose rights were thus extinguished, then sued and obtained a decree for damages against A. After C had obtained this decree against A, A sold his equity of redemption in the entire mortgaged concern to B, and by this sale all the denu and powna, or liabilities and outstandings of the concern, were transferred from A to B. C then, after notice to B, obtained an order by which B was made the judgment-debtor in the place of A. B took no proceedings within one year to set aside this order; but, after the lapse of three years, upon C attempting to execute his decree, instituted the present suit to set aside the order, and for an injunction to restrain B from executing the decree against him. Held, first, that the purchase by B of the denu-powna of the indigo concern of which A had been the proprietor did not make B liable to pay the amount, for which C had obtained a decree against A, as damages for the extinguishment of his darpattni right; second, that the order substituting B for A in the suit for damages was illegal; third, that, although B was barred by limitation from suing to set aside that order, he was entitled to an injunction restraining C personally from executing the decree against him. DHURONIDHUR SEN v. AGRA BANK

37. — Injunction restraining execution of a decree obtained in a suit against plaintiffs' karnavan—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 56 (b)—Suit by junior members of a tarwad.—In a suit brought in a subordinate Court by the junior members of a Malabar tarwad against their karnavan and others, the plaintiffs prayed for a declaration of the uraima right of their tarwad in a certain devasom, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants, other than the members of the plaintiffs' tarwad, from executing a decree of a District Court, passed on appeal from a Munsif's Court, whereby certain lands of the devasom were decreed to be surrendered to them in the character of uraima, it appeared (1) that plaintiffs' karnavan was a party to the suit in which the abovementioned decree was passed; (2) that the plaintiffs' tarwad was otherwise entitled to the uraima right by adverse possession if not immemorial title. Held that the injunction sought was not precluded by Specific Relief Act, s. 56 (b), and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the decree as prayed. APPU v. 38. ——— Application for injunction to restrain execution of decrees—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 56—Multiplicity of proceedings.—Certain traders, having failed in business and being indebted to the defendant under a decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, entered into a composition with their creditors, and a deed was executed to which the defendant became a party in respect of his judgment-debt. The defendant subsequently applied for execution of this decree. The trustees, to whom the debtor's assets were made over under the deed, together with the debtors, now brought a suit in the same Court for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing or proceeding to execute his decree. The plaint was rejected by the District Judge after it had been registered and numbered, and a written statement had been filed. Held that the injunction sought for was not necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings within the meaning of the Specific Relief Act, s. 56, cl. (a). Semble—The suit for the injunction prayed for was not maintainable with reference to the Specific Relief Act, s. 56, cl. (b). VENKATESA TAWKER v. RAMASAMI CHETTIAR. I. L. R., 18 Mad., 338

39. ——— Temporary injunction to stay sale in execution of decrees—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 53 and 56—Jurisdiction to grant temporary injunction—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 492 and 811—Material irregularity in sale.—In a proceeding for execution of a decree, pending before the District Judge, certain immovable properties having been ordered to be sold, an application was made by a third party that property No. 1 on the sale list should be sold after the other properties on the list. The application was rejected, and the appellant brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold, and he also applied for an injunction to stay the sale of that property, which was granted by the Subordinate Judge. The District Judge, in accordance with that injunction, postponed the sale of property No. 1, and caused two other properties on the list to be sold. Objection was made under s. 811 of the Civil Procedure Code that the District Judge had acted with material irregularity in postponing the sale, inasmuch as the injunction was not binding upon him, being one not granted by a superior Court, and the Subordinate Judge having no power to grant it under s. 56 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Held that s. 56 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) applies only to perpetual injunctions, temporary injunctions being left by s. 53 to be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure, and s. 56 was not intended to affect injunctions applied for under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code. The temporary injunction, therefore, granted by the Subordinate Judge was not ultra vires; and the District Judge was bound to postpone the sale as he did, and he did not act irregularly in doing so. Dharmadhar Sen v. literally "et cetera," or "and others"). The dharmakarta of the said two temples and of three minor ones only, having limited rights and duties and being in many respects subordinate to the viccharanakarta, had, in pursuance of immemorial custom, used a seal in connection with his office, which had never borne more than a single figure, without legend. He had now made and used in the conduct of temple affairs a new seal, bearing the same figure, but with the legend "Tirumalai," "Tirupati vagaira devasthanam dharmakarta" added to it. On the viccharanakarta suing for a declaration and for a perpetual injunction to restrain the use of a seal containing such words,—Held that, although the legend might in a sense be accurate in representing what the defendant actually was, and the viccharanakarta had no property in the word "vagaira," yet the defendant should be restrained from using it upon the seal, since, from the manner in which that word had been used in the case of plaintiff's appointment to cover the thirty minor temples connected with the two main temples, a special meaning had become attached thereto when used in connection with the two principal temples; and since the object of the dharmakarta in using it was to assert an extension of his rights and to claim a position co-extensive with that of the viccharanakarta, which in fact he did not possess. RAMANUSA PEDDA JIJANGARLU v. (g) NUISANCE.

45. ——— Nuisance from cotton mill—Noise—Smoke and puff of mill—Damages—Combination of injunction and damages—Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877)—Delay—Acquiescence—Right of reversioners to sue.—The plaintiffs were owners of the Grant Buildings situated at Colaba in Bombay. The said buildings comprised two three-storied blocks known respectively as the eastern block and the western block. Each block consisted of four divisions, those in the eastern block being numbered, respectively, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, and those in the western block being numbered Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8. Each block contained thirty-four sets of rooms. The plaintiffs became owners of the Grant Buildings in 1868, and had ever since derived a considerable income from the rooms by letting them as dwelling-rooms to Europeans at an average rent of Rs50 a month. The defendants were owners of an adjacent cotton mill known as the Nicol Mill, which was erected in 1878. Prior to 1873, the site of the mill was occupied by the buildings of the Hydraulic Press Company, which were erected in 1868. These premises were in 1873 purchased by the Nicol Press and Manufacturing Company, who thereupon proceeded to build the Nicol Mill. On the 3rd August 1874, the erection of the mill having then just commenced, the plaintiffs' solicitor wrote to the secretaries of the Nicol Press and Manufacturing Company as follows: "It is rumoured that it is intended to carry on the business of spinning and weaving in the buildings now being erected. A business of this nature carried on so close to the Grant Buildings will render our clients' property comparatively valueless, and we are instructed to bring this fact to your notice and to say that the Bank will not permit any business of the kind to be carried on to the detriment of their property." To this letter the company replied that the business of the Hydraulic Press Company had been previously carried on by that company on the same site without any remonstrance either from the plaintiffs or from the occupants of the Grant Buildings; that the value of the plaintiffs' property would be increased, not depreciated, by the erection of the new mill; that the plaintiffs had been aware of the intention of the Nicol Company to convert the Hydraulic Press Company's premises into a spinning and weaving mill, and that they should have entered their protest months before; that under the circumstances the plaintiffs had no right to interfere in the working of the mill, and that the Nicol Company, therefore, intended to continue the erection of the building and to use it, when completed, for the purposes of the company. The mill was completed and commenced working in June 1876, with 18,044 spindles, there being room and engine-power sufficient for 40,000 spindles and 250 additional looms. In March 1877, the number of spindles was increased to 19,882, which was the number in the mill at the date of suit. Since March 1874, the eastern block of the Grant Buildings had been closed and not offered to tenants, the demand for rooms of that character having been only sufficient to fill the western block. In 1878, however, the demand again increased, and the eastern block was re-opened and let to tenants,—Division No. 1 being opened in January 1878 and Division No. 2 in March 1878, Division No. 3 in November, and Division No. 4 in December 1878. Complaints having been received from the tenants of these divisions of the nuisance arising from the Nicol Mill, the plaintiffs in December 1878 sent instructions to counsel to prepare a plaint against the Nicol Press and Manufacturing Company. On the 26th of that month, however, a resolution was passed to wind up the company, and the working of the mill was discontinued. In consequence of this, no plaint was prepared, but the plaintiffs' solicitor sent a notice to the liquidators of the company referring to what had taken place and warning them not to sell the mill without giving the purchaser notice of the plaintiffs' intention to take proceedings against any person who should recommence to work the mill. Advertisements to that effect were also published in the English and native daily newspapers. On the 9th August 1880, hearing that the mill was to be put up to auction, the plaintiffs sent to the liquidators a similar notice. On the 25th August 1880, the defendants' mill was put up for sale and the notices were read out by the plaintiffs' solicitor. The defendants were present and heard the notice read. The defendants purchased the property for Rs3,61,00, and the sale was confirmed by the Court. On the 1st January 1881, the mill recommenced working, having been idle for two years. On the 26th January 1881, a notice was sent to the defendants to discontinue the working of the mill on pain of a suit. The defendants replied denying the nuisance and stating that any suit would be defended. The suit was filed on the 5th February 1881. The plaintiffs alleged a nuisance, especially to the tenants of the eastern block of the Grant Buildings, arising from the noise, smoke, and cotton fluff and smells issuing from the defendants' mill. They complained that the said nuisances would be much increased when the defendants carried out their intention of completing the number of spindles and looms for which the mill was built. They prayed for an injunction and £1,000 damages. The defendants denied the alleged nuisance, and contended that the plaintiffs were debarred from the relief claimed. At the time of the filing of the suit the only rooms in the Grant Buildings that were vacant were the following: In the east block two rooms in Division No. 1, one room in Division No. 3, and one room in Division No. 4. In the west block five rooms were vacant. The total net rental of the vacant rooms was £350 a month, and of the occupied rooms £2,410. Evidence was given that many tenants had vacated their rooms in the east block on account of the nuisance experienced from the mill, but that the demand for rooms was so great that other tenants were found to fill the vacancies almost as soon as they occurred. At the time of the hearing of the suit four rooms were vacant in the east block and none in the west block. Between the date of the filing of the suit and the hearing, changes had been effected in the mill which decreased the nuisance,—e.g., new boilers were erected, smokeless coal was used, screens, steam-jets, and baffle-plates were introduced. In order to diminish the noise, double fixed windows were put in on the north side of the mill and the cog-wheeled gearing was bricked up. At the hearing it was contended—(1) that the mill was no nuisance; (2) that even if it was, the plaintiffs were debarred by their conduct from objecting; (3) that the plaintiffs, being reversioners, were not entitled to sue. Held on the evidence that the plaintiffs were not debarred from suing by acquiescence or laches, but that the defendants and the previous owners of the mill had been at every stage acquainted with the plaintiffs' intention to resist the working of the mill if it proved to be a nuisance; (2) that the working of the mill was a nuisance to the occupants of Divisions 2, 3, and 4 by reason of (a) the noise and also by reason of the (b) smoke and cotton fluff issuing from the mill during the monsoon; (3) that the only cause of action on which the plaintiffs could rely in support of their claim to an injunction was the diminution in the value of their property owing to the working of the mill being a nuisance in respect of the four rooms vacant in Divisions Nos. 2, 3, and 4, at the time of the filing of the suit; (4) that the efficacy of the changes and improvements made by the defendants after the filing of the suit for the purpose of diminishing the nuisance complained of depended so much on the good intention and constant personal care of the defendants and their servants that it ought not to influence the question of injunction when once the nuisance was proved to have existed; (5) that although (the plaintiffs being at the date of the suit

entitled only to complain of the nuisance as to four out of sixty-eight sets of rooms) it might be said there was no material diminution of the value of the property arising from the nuisance, the Court, in considering the propriety of granting an injunction, would have regard to the fact that the injunction, if granted, would render it unnecessary for the plaintiffs to bring an action in respect of all the other rooms in Divisions Nos. 2, 3, and 4 after giving the tenants notice to quit, and so prevent that multiplicity of suits on which an injunction is authorized by s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act. Under the special circumstances of the case, the question whether an injunction should go should be dealt with as if the plaintiffs had a right of action in respect of all the rooms in Divisions Nos. 2, 3, and 4; (6) the only interest of the plaintiffs in the Grant Buildings being a personal interest and the only object of the plaintiffs having been to secure the highest value for their property, and considering that, from the nature of the case, an injunction, such as the plaintiffs prayed for, would place the defendants entirely in the power of the plaintiffs, the relief given to the plaintiffs should assume the form of pecuniary compensation rather than of an injunction, and directed further evidence to be taken as to the diminution in value of the plaintiffs' property caused or likely to be caused by the nuisance so far as it affected Divisions Nos. 2, 3, and 4 of the eastern block. After taking further evidence, the Court considered that the case would be best dealt with by a combination of damages and injunction, and made an order for an injunction to issue against noise, smoke, and cotton fluff so as to be a nuisance to the plaintiffs as owners or to their tenants for the time being of Divisions Nos. 2, 3, and 4. Such injunction not to issue in case the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs the sum of £40,000 before the expiration of a fortnight from the date of the decree. In the event of the payment of the said sum to them, an injunction to issue restraining defendants from working the said mill (otherwise than with closed double glass windows on the side next the Grant Buildings, and also restraining defendants from allowing any smoke or cotton fluff to issue so as to cause such nuisance as aforesaid, with liberty to plaintiffs to apply in case the noise be materially increased beyond what it is at present. On appeal,—Held per BAYLEY, C.J. (Acting), and WISE, J., that admitting that money compensation was a right form of relief, it should be compensation measured by the premises not owned, but occupied by the plaintiffs; in other words, the rooms unlet. It was only in respect of those that the plaintiffs were competent to sue, and they could not be entitled to compensation on a more extensive ground. It was only in respect of the rooms in question that the present suit and the decree therein could guard the defendants against further actions. An award of £40,000 to the plaintiffs could not prevent any tenant of the rooms affected by the nuisance from suing the defendants on the same grounds as were taken by the plaintiffs in this suit. It would be unreasonable that the defendants should be made to pay as damages in bulk to persons not legally entitled what they might have to pay over again to those who are or may be entitled in detail. For the damages arising to the plaintiffs on account of the rooms unlet at the institution of the suit, Rs. 1,000 would afford sufficient compensation, and the sum awarded should be reduced to that amount. The decree was varied accordingly, and a clause was also inserted distinctly providing against any increase of smoke, cotton fluff, or noise of machinery beyond what subsisted at the date of the decree; and further providing that in case any invention should be made by which the nuisance might easily be diminished, the decree was not to be deemed to prejudice the right, if any, the plaintiffs as owners or the tenants of the Grant Buildings possessed to require the defendants to introduce such invention into the said mill so as to cause the least annoyance reasonably possible. LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA v. 48. — Mandatory injunction, when to be granted—Judicial discretion—Damages—Rights of co-sharers.—In granting or withholding an injunction, a Court should exercise a judicial discretion, and should weigh the amount of substantial mischief done or threatened to the plaintiff, and compare it with that which the injunction, if granted, would inflict upon the defendant. 50. — Ijmal property—Cultivation of indigo by one co-sharer without consent of others—Injunction as between co-sharers—Practice of the English Courts in granting injunction, Applicability of.—W, while in possession of an entire mouzah as ijaradar, had under an arrangement with the proprietors built factories and cultivated indigo by reclaiming a quantity of waste land. On the expiration of his lease, W, who still held a portion of the mouzah in ijara from a 2-anna co-sharer, continued to cultivate indigo on the khas lands as before, and, disregarding the opposition of the 14-anna co-sharers, claimed an exclusive title to do so. The 14-anna co-sharers thereupon brought a suit against W for ijmal possession of the khas lands, and prayed, among other things, for an injunction prohibiting the defendant from sowing indigo upon the ijmal lands without the plaintiffs' consent, and also for a general injunction to prohibit the defendant from throwing any obstacles in the way of plaintiffs' holding ijmal possession of the lands. The Court below granted an injunction prohibiting the defendant from growing indigo on the khas lands without the consent of the plaintiffs. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction, but having regard to the circumstances under which the defendant cultivated the lands, it was necessary to vary the injunction granted by the Court below by making it an injunction restraining the defendant from excluding by any means the plaintiffs from their enjoyment of the ijmal possession of the lands. RAM CHAND DUTT v. But no corresponding obligation on the plaintiffs to repair was shown; and from the evidence, including that afforded by a compromise made in 1842, it appeared that the repairs were to be effected by a common collection made through the person in management, who was to account for his receipts and expenses. Held by the High Court that, whether or not they were entitled to exclude others from interfering with the repairs of the Shops made by their ancestors, the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction prohibiting others from interfering with the general conservancy of the tank. MUTTAYA v. damages? English cases on the subject reviewed. The Court will in such cases interfere, as well by mandatory as by preventive injunction, provided that in the circumstances of the case there is nothing inequitable in putting in force the former remedy. The Court will look not merely to the use to which rooms, in a dwelling-house from which light is obstructed, are actually put at the time of the obstruction, but also to the use to which they may be put for all reasonable purposes of occupation. It should also be satisfied that the new wall so materially interferes with the comfort and convenience of the plaintiff that the consequences of the breach of agreement cannot adequately be compensated by damages. It should also satisfy itself whether the plaintiff protested against the new wall being built whilst in course of erection, or quietly acquiesced in what the defendant was doing, and only objected when the wall was completed. Obstruction to light and air—Damages—Injury not compensated for by damages—Demolition of house—Execution of decree—Ancient lights.—Re-erection of his house by the defendant, notwithstanding notice from the plaintiff, so as to darken some of the principal rooms of the plaintiff's house, making them unfit for occupation during the day without artificial light, is an injury which cannot be adequately redressed by an award of damages, and against which the Court will grant relief by issuing a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to pull down so much of the house as is necessary to stop the injury. The probability of the defendant suffering a greater loss by the demolition of his house than the plaintiff, if his claim could be reduced to money, would suffer by being awarded a money compensation, is no ground for depriving the plaintiff of a mandatory injunction in his favour, except under special circumstances. To determine what demolition of the house is necessary, the Court executing the decree was directed to

59. ———— Obstruction to light and air—Attachment for infringement of injunction—Opinions of surveyors.—When an injunction has been granted restraining a person from interrupting the access of light and air to certain windows, and the Court considers that the injunction has been infringed, an attachment will issue, even though the defendant has proceeded according to the advice of his surveyor and legal adviser in constructing the building complained of as a breach of the injunction. The Court in such cases does not consider itself bound by the opinion of surveyors, but will form its own judgment as to the probable effect of the structure complained of. PRANJIVANDAS HURJIVANDAS v. 60. ———— Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54—Remedy in damages.—Under the Specific Relief Act, 1877, s. 54, the Court may grant a perpetual injunction against a defendant who invades or threatens to invade a plaintiff's right (e.g., to light and air) in cases there specified, and, inter alia, when the invasion is such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. The rule so laid down differs from the rule upon which the decisions are based in English law. In the latter the right to an injunction is a prima facie right to which a plaintiff is entitled on proof that material injury has been sustained, provided that no circumstances are disclosed to deprive him of that prima facie right. Under the Specific Relief Act, an injunction is not to be given when the remedy in damages is considered adequate. BOYSON v. DEANE [I L. R., 22 Mad., 251]

63. ———— Injunction or damages—Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict., c. 27)—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).—The plaintiff owned a house in Girgaon Road, Bombay, in which he had resided with his family for twenty-four years. Through certain windows in the south wall of his house, numbered respectively 3, 5, 7, and 8, he had during all that time enjoyed free access of light and air. In 1887 the defendant purchased the land to the south of the plaintiff's house, pulled down the building that then existed upon it, and proceeded to build a new one on the same site, the north wall of which was about six feet distant from the south wall of the plaintiff's house, and was intended to be sixty-four feet high, i.e., about twenty feet higher than the plaintiff's windows Nos. 7 and 8, which were in the plaintiff's loft. The plaintiff sued for an injunction. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages, but not to an injunction. DRUNJIBHOY COWASJI UMERGAR v. LISBOY [I L. R., 13 Bom., 252]

64. ———— Damages—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54, cl. (c)—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26—Mandatory injunction.—The plaintiff complained that the defendants intended to build so as to obstruct the passage of light and air through an ancient window in his house, and render a room therein unfit for use, and prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from so building. It was proved that the wall intended to be built would so shut out the light and air as to render the room completely dark and unfit for use. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction as prayed. The defendants appealed to the Joint Judge, who amended the lower Court's decree by ordering the removal of the injunction and directing, in its stead, a new window to be opened in the plaintiff's house to the east of the window in question. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court.—Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the plaintiff had an absolute and indefeasible right to the easement he had acquired; and the only possible question was whether injunction or damages was the appropriate remedy under the circumstances of the particular case. Held also that, as the evidence established that, after defendants' wall was built, plaintiff's room would not remain substantially as useful to him as before, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. Holland v. Worley, L. R., 26 Ch. D., 578, distinguished. 66. ————— Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54—Easement—Injunction or damages.—It was not intended by s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, that a man should not have an injunction granted to him unless his property would otherwise be practically destroyed if the injunction were not granted. Where the plaintiff had for over twenty years carried on the business of manufacturing a particular kind of cloth in a certain house, and the defendant built in the neighbourhood of that house in such a manner as to render the plaintiff's house practically useless for the purposes of his manufacture, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, and not merely to damages. *Aynsley v. 67. ————— Easement—Damages—Practice where amount of injury does not justify injunction.—The plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from erecting a building which interfered with the light and air coming to the plaintiff's house. The lower Appeal Court found that, though the light and air of the plaintiff's house was sensibly diminished by the defendant's building, there was not such substantial damage done as would justify an injunction, and it dismissed the suit with costs, being of opinion that the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was a suit for damages. Held that the lower Court was right in not granting an injunction, but instead of dismissing the suit, and referring the plaintiff to another suit for damages, ought itself to have directed an inquiry as to the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the diminution of the supply of light and air to his house. KALLIANDAS v. where it was found that no right of the plaintiffs had been invaded, no damage had accrued, and no case of prospective damage had been made out, so that he was not entitled to an injunction.

71. ————— Right of way—Ownership of soil—Suit for trespass, injunction, and to close doors.—G, the owner of certain property, sold it in lots to different persons. The plaintiffs purchased a portion of the property, and obtained from G a conveyance, in which the southern boundary of the land purchased by them was stated to be "the land of the said G out of which he has allowed a passage six feet broad running almost straight west and east, and terminating on another passage leading," etc.; the deed continued, "which two passages the said G hath granted and allowed, and doth hereby grant and allow to" the plaintiffs, "their heirs, representatives, and assigns, and all other the purchasers of the northern portion of the said piece of land, etc., together also with the right of the two passages for ingress and egress hereinbefore mentioned." In a second deed conveying another parcel of land to the plaintiffs G said, with reference to the latter passage, "No one shall be able to throw sweepings or filth on the said road, or make it unclean; if any one does at any time act thus, you will deal with him according to the laws in force." The defendant had become possessed of part of the northern portion of the land sold by G, and he also owned, under a distinct title, a house abutting on the lane in dispute, but having no doors opening into it. Shortly before the institution of the present suit, the defendant constructed three doors opening on to the lane, two of which were used for the purpose of cleaning two privies on the defendant's premises, and the third was used by the defendant and his servants as a means of access to the lane. In a suit by the plaintiffs seeking damages for trespass, and an injunction against the alleged wrongful user of the lane by the defendant, and praying that he might be ordered to close the three doors.—Held (per CORON, C.J., and MARKEZ, J., overruling the decision of MACPHERSON, J.) that the plaintiffs had not such a property in the soil of the lane as would entitle them to prevent the defendant from making new doors on to the lane, and to restrain him from using the doors already made; they had only a right of way: but an injunction was granted restraining the defendant from using his doorways for the purpose of cleaning his privies or in any other manner so as to obstruct the free use by the plaintiffs of the lane. MADANMAHAJ SEN v. 72. ————— Obstruction to right of way—Special damages—Injunction and not compensation granted.—The defendants closed a gateway leading across a level crossing of their railway over which there was a public right of way. The plaintiff alleged that by the closing of this gateway access to his bungalow during the monsoon was completely stopped; and he sued to have the gateway reopened. The lower Appellate Court found that there was a public right of way over the level crossing; that it had been obstructed by the defendants; and that the plaintiff had suffered special damage by the obstruction. On special appeal to the High Court, it was contended by the defendants that the plaintiff was only entitled to compensation, and not to an injunction. Held that the inconvenience caused to the plaintiff was real and substantial; that the plaintiff was entitled to the user of the right of way in question, and under the circumstances to an injunction against its obstruction. G. Until shortly before suit, the defendants' field had only been used for agriculture, and the way through the plaintiff's field was used by them for ordinary agricultural purposes. The defendants, however, converted their field into a timber depot and began to use the way across the plaintiff's field for purposes connected with the timber trade. The plaintiff sued for an injunction. Held that plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from using the way otherwise than for agricultural purposes. DESAI BHAGORAI v. (i) PUBLIC OFFICERS WITH STATUTORY POWERS.

74. ————— Acts of trespass committed by public functionaries—Municipal Act (Bom. Act II of 1865), ss. 131, 160.—Principles upon which the Court will interfere by injunction to restrain acts of public functionaries in excess of their statutory powers considered. If the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay is desirous of putting in force the provisions of s. 131 of the Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1865) and compelling a householder (whose house has been taken down) to set the foundations back to the general level of the street, he must exercise his powers when, or within fourteen days after, the householder gives notice, under s. 160 of the Act, of his intention to re-build. Where a trespass of a continuing nature has been committed by the defendant, but has been discontinued before suit brought, the Court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing such trespass, merely because the plaintiff entertains vague apprehensions that the trespass may be recommenced. CHARILDAS LALLUBHAI v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF BOMBAY . 8 Bom. O. C., 85

75. ————— Act of corporate body—Injunction to restrain libel—Trustees of Port of Bombay—Bombay Act I of 1873—Resolutions of corporation.—The Court will not grant an injunction to restrain the publication of a libel; not to restrain, at the suit of an individual, an act of a corporate body, on the ground of such act being ultra vires, except where such individual has been damaged by such act in his rights of ownership, commodity, or easement. There is no authority for the proposition that an individual is entitled to protection by way of injunction against the act of a corporation though in excess of their powers, which affects that individual's character and reputation, whether private, professional, or commercial, which he would not have been entitled to had the act complained of been committed by an individual defendant, on the ground that the act in question was one which the corporation had no power to do under their instrument of incorporation. The Trustees of the Port of Bombay have the power to record their decisions and opinions with regard to matters connected with the business they have under their Act power to transact; whether such decisions or opinions are confined to statements of what they believe to be actual facts, or extend also to the giving of advice for the conduct of their successors in office with regard to such business, and whether the expression of such decisions, opinions, or advice may or may not contain statements injurious to the character or reputation of others. Where therefore the plaintiff sought for an injunction to restrain the Trustees of the Port of Bombay from publishing two resolutions alleged to reflect injuriously on his character and reputation, on the ground that it was not within the powers conferred on the Trustees by Bombay Act I of 1873 to discuss or pass resolutions affecting his character, and that the publication of such resolutions was calculated to injuriously affect him in his commercial relations with the Government.—Held that the injunction could not be granted. Held also that, though the Court, under certain circumstances, might have the power of so framing an order for injunction as to produce the effect of cancelling the minutes of a resolution recorded in the books of a corporate body, yet that it could not order the Trustees of such body to pass and record a resolution dictated by the Court. SHERREDD v. of the company for twenty-five years, and it was provided that they should have the general control and management of the company. Cl. 98 of the Articles provided that the said firm, as such agents, should have full power and authority (inter alia) to appoint and employ, in or for the purposes of the transaction and management of the affairs and business of the company, such solicitors as they should think proper. An agreement, dated 26th August 1874, was also entered into between the company and the partners in the firm of M F & Co., the executors, administrators, and assigns, for the time being constituting the partnership firm of M F & Co., whereby it was agreed that the said firm should be agents to the company for twenty-five years to buy and sell, etc., and particularly to exercise all the powers contained in cl. 98 of the Articles of Association. Messrs. C & B were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. Merwanji Framji, one of the members of the said firm of M F & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G, one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that in July 1881 he procured his own election and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company; and on the 8th August 1881 procured the passing of a resolution at a board meeting to the effect that as Messrs. C & B, the company's solicitors, were also the solicitors of the agents, it was desirable, for the interests of the company, that a change should be made, and that Messrs. H C & L be appointed solicitors of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H C & L had been for a long time the solicitors of G, and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs and a violation of the Articles of Association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G and two other directors of the company and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874, and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs. H C & L as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing anything inconsistent with the Memorandum and Articles of Association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of Merwanji Framji, and that the powers conferred on the agents by cl. 98 of the Articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the Articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. It being admitted that the conduct of the defendants would be supported by the company in general meeting owing to their having a preponderance of votes,—

Held that, inasmuch as the Court would not, by a decree for specific performance or by injunction, compel the company to retain the plaintiffs in the confidential position of agents, it would not restrain the defendants or the company from appointing a solicitor, which was only a violation of what was ancillary or incidental to the principal part of the contract, viz., the agreement that the plaintiffs should be the agents of the company for twenty-five years; and further, semble—that on the merits of the case the Court would not interfere on behalf of the plaintiffs. NUSSEKWANJI v. 82. ——— Infringement of patent—Label—Details different, but general similarity likely to deceive.—The plaintiffs sued the defendant for an infringement of their label used on tins of aniline dye, which they imported into Bombay. The label covered the top of the tin, and bore upon it the picture of an elephant in the centre of a curved band; the rest of the label being a combination in green, red, and gold representations, for the most part, of coins, medals, and tracing. The defendant was the agent in Bombay of Cassella & Co., of Frankfurt. Prior to 1892, Cassella & Co. had imported aniline dye into Bombay in tins bearing a label, the chief feature of which was an elephant. Of that label, however, the plaintiffs did not complain. But in January 1892, Cassella & Co. adopted a new label, also bearing the picture of an elephant, different in some respects from the picture on the plaintiffs' label and with new surroundings, to none of which, taken separately, did the plaintiffs object, but they complained that in its general effect this new label was so similar to their trade mark as to amount to a colourable imitation thereof, and to be likely to deceive purchasers. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against the defendant. Per SARGENT, C.J.—The question in a case of this description is not what would be the effect on brokers or even dealers in Bombay, but how the label would be likely to strike incautious or unwary purchasers, such as are to be found more particularly in the mofussil. After a careful examination, I cannot feel any doubt that the attention of such purchasers would be arrested by the general effect of the label, and that, notwithstanding such differences as undoubtedly exist in respect to the colour and size of the elephant and in some other respects, they

3. ———— Penal Code, s. 84—Plea of insanity in criminal cases—Legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind.—S. 84 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) lays down the legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind. It is by this test, as distinguished from the medical test, that the criminality of an act is to be determined. The accused killed his two young children with a hatchet. The reason given for the crime was that, while he was laid up with fever, the crying of the children annoyed him. It was alleged that the fever had made him irritable and sensitive to sound, but it did not appear that he was delirious at the time of perpetrating the crime. There was no attempt at concealment, and the accused made a full confession. Held that, as the accused was conscious of the nature of his act, he must be presumed to have been conscious of its criminality. 12. ————— Imbecile—Inability to understand proceedings—Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1872), ss. 186 and 423.—The provisions of s. 186 of the Code of Criminal Procedure do not apply to a person who is of unsound mind; they apply to persons who are unable to understand the proceedings from deafness, or dumbness, or ignorance of the language of the country, or other similar cause. But where the inability to understand the proceedings is due to unsoundness of mind, the procedure provided in Ch. XXXI of the Code must be followed. Where a Magistrate found that an accused person convicted of theft was an imbecile and consequently unable to understand the proceedings, but that he was not of unsound mind, the High Court held that this distinction was without a difference, and, under s. 297 of the Code, annulled the conviction, and, declaring the accused to be of unsound mind, directed that he should be released on sufficient security being given that he would be properly taken care of, and prevented from doing injury to himself or any other person, and for his appearance when required; and that, in default of such security being given, the case should be reported to Government. EMPERESS v. The High Court held that this was not a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, but an allegation of sudden provocation, and he ought to have been put on his trial in order that the Court might ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. Held (per BIRDWOOD and JARDINE, JJ.) that, unless the accused's habit of smoking ganja had induced in him such a diseased state of mind as to make him incapable of knowing the nature of his act or its criminality, s. 84 of the Penal Code did not apply in his favour. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 14. ————— Penal Code, s. 84—Plea of insanity in criminal cases—Legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind.—The accused stabbed a child (his brother's wife) with a sword and killed her. He was charged with murder, and a plea of insanity was set up at the trial. No motive could be assigned for his attack on the child, in which he persisted in the presence of other persons; and it appeared that he had been in the habit of treating the child kindly and affectionately. He was suffering from fever and want of food at the time, and the medical evidence showed it was possible that the act was committed under a sudden attack of homicidal mania. It was in evidence that he had abused some of his relations a short time before,—the abuse being probably due to irritability of mind caused by fever. He confessed the crime to the village Magistrate and answered questions put to him rationally, but before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge he denied that he had killed the child. He was convicted of murder. Held that, as the accused was not proved to have been by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law, the conviction was right. Queen-Emperess v. INSOLVENCY—continued.1. CASES UNDER ACT XXVIII OF 1865.*1. ——— Order for winding-up estate —Effect of an execution proceeding—Leave to proceed—Laches—Right of assignees and creditors.

—An order made under Act XXVIII of 1865 for the winding up of the estate of a trader not only stayed the further prosecution of suits, etc., against him, but also prevented the completion of an execution against his immoveable or ordinary moveable property, if such execution had not been consummated by seizure and sale before the filing in Court of the resolution passed at the meeting of the creditors, unless the leave of the Court be given to the execution-creditor to proceed notwithstanding the winding-up order. Such leave was not to be given except upon special grounds. Laches of the execution-creditor was an obstacle to his obtaining such leave. Under the Insolvent Debtors Act (1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, English Repealed Act; 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, India), the mere delivery of the writ of f. fa. to the sheriff or his deputy for execution bound the goods as against the assignees in insolvency, subject to the right of the execution-creditor to have satisfaction of his debt by sale. But in bankruptcy the law is otherwise. The execution must be levied by seizure and sale before the date of the fiat or the filing of the petition for adjudication; otherwise the execution-creditor is entitled only to a rateable part of his debt with the other creditors. FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION OF INDIA AND CHINA v. PRANJIVANDAS HANJIVANDAS 3 Bom., O. C., 25

2. ——— Claims proveable under Act XXVIII of 1865—Claim against directors of joint stock company.

—A claim against the directors of a joint stock company to make good funds of the company expended by them, on behalf of the company, in transactions that the company was forbidden by its articles of association to engage in, was proveable under Act XXVIII of 1865. LIQUIDATORS OF THE INDIAN PENINSULAR, LONDON AND CHINA BANK v. SCOTT 5 Bom., O. C., 167

3. ——— Liability of trader for calls on shares—Act XXVIII of 1865, s. 24—Winding-up order—Discharge.

—An insolvent trader, who has obtained his discharge under s. 24 of Act XXVIII of 1865, is not liable for calls made, after he has obtained his discharge, in respect of shares held by him in a joint stock company, when the order for the winding-up of such company has been made prior to the time of the insolvent trader obtaining his discharge. IN RE MERCANTILE CREDIT AND FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION. 2. CLAIMS OF ATTACHING CREDITORS AND OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE.4. ——— Mortgage by insolvent—

—Priority—Rights of mortgages—Official Assignee.—A mortgage executed by an insolvent (who has not obtained a certificate and discharge) is subject to the lien of the mortgagee in priority to the claim of the Official Assignee under the insolvency. KERAKOON v. BROOKS 4 W. R., P. C., 62

[9 Moore's L. A., 339

5. Attachment by decree-holder—Priority—Vesting order.—An attachment made by a decree-holder prior to a vesting order in favour of the Official Assignee must have preference to the claim of the Official Assignee. SHAW NARAIN SINGH v. MILLER 17 W. R., 234

6. Attachment before judgment—Adjudication of insolvency subsequent to decree.—P., having attached R. M.'s property and obtained a decree against him, subsequently had him adjudicated an insolvent. The Court ruled that the attachment was unaffected by the adjudication. IN RE RAMCOMBY MITTER Bourke, O. C., 149

7. Subsequent insolvency—Priority of Official Assignee.—Where an attachment previous to decree had been obtained against the property of the defendants, it was held that attachment did not give to the plaintiff any licence in respect of the property attached as against the assignee of the defendants, notwithstanding their insolvency having occurred after the plaintiff had obtained his order attaching the property. PETUMBER MUNDLE v. COCHRANE

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 11: Bourke, O. C., 299]

8. Vesting order, Effect of, on attached property.—An attachment of property before judgment places it in the custody of the law, but does not alter the property in it. An order, therefore, vesting the property of an insolvent in the Official Assignee vests in that officer property of the insolvent which has been so attached. IN THE MATTER OF GOCOOOL DASS SOONDERJEE. PETUMBER MUNDLE v. GOCOOOL DASS SOONDERJEE

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 327: Bourke, O. C., 240]

9. Effect of vesting order—Priority.—Certain property was attached before decree under Act VIII of 1859, s. 83. On the 11th of May the plaintiff obtained a decree in the suit against the person whose property had been attached. On the same day the judgment-debtor filed his petition in insolvency, and the usual vesting order was made. Held in the Court below that the Official Assignee was entitled to the goods, notwithstanding the attachment before decree followed by the decree. Held, on appeal, property attached before decree passes to the Official Assignee under an insolvency where the adjudication and vesting order are obtained after decree, and where the attaching creditor has not proceeded to sell. Simble—The Official Assignee has priority over the execution-creditor, unless the latter has actually sold under the attachment, and received the proceeds from the officer of the Court. BAMPERDAUD BOY v. CALLAGHAND DASS

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 325, and on appeal, Id., 378]

10. Vesting order—Priority of Official Assignee.—The title of the Official Assignee of an insolvent under 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21 (the Insolvent Act) is preferable to that of a creditor of the insolvent who before the vesting order has obtained an order for attachment before judgment under ss. 83 and 84 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, in respect of the property comprised in such attachment. The effect of attachment before judgment is to secure that the property attached shall be forthcoming at the time of pronouncing the decree, to abide whatever order the Court shall make upon it. A vesting order in insolvency is in effect an assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors, and is paramount to the right of an attachment before the judgment-creditor, as it is more equitable that property under the control of the Court should be applied for the benefit of all the creditors than for the exclusive advantage of one. JAYA RAMJI v. JADAVJI NATHA

[1 Bom., 234]

JAYA RAMJI v. JADAVJI NATHA. EX-PARTE GAMBLE 2 Bom., 165: 2nd Ed., 142

11. Priority of Official Assignee.—Where moveable property of defendants in certain suits in Civil Courts in the mofussil had been attached before judgment under ss. 83 and 84 of Act VIII of 1859, and so continued until decrees and orders for execution had been made in those suits, and warrants for such execution had been lodged with the Nazir of the Court,—Held that those warrants at the latest, on their delivery to the Nazir, bound the property without re-seizure by him; and that accordingly the execution-creditors were entitled to preference as regarded the attached goods over the Official Assignee, in whom the estate of the defendants had become vested by the orders of the Insolvent Debtors' Court at Bombay, made before sale by the Nazir of the attached property, but subsequently to the delivery to him of the warrants for execution. Held, however, also that mere attachment before judgment does not so bind the property attached as to give to the attaching creditors priority over the Official Assignee, in whom the estates of the defendants had been vested by orders of the Insolvent Debtors' Court made subsequently to such attachment, but before decree and warrant for execution. Doe d. O'Hanlon v. Patologus, Mort., 323, observed upon. GAMBLE v. BRIDGES

12. Priority of Official Assignee—Civil Procedure Code, s. 81—Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), ss. 7 and 49.—The plaintiffs brought a suit against P & Co. for the recovery of a sum of money with interest, and on 15th May obtained a prohibitory order for attachment before judgment under s. 81 of Act VIII of 1859, under which they attached, on the 17th of May, the right, title, and interest of P & Co. in the premises in which they carried on business in Calcutta. On the 20th of May, P & Co. were adjudicated insolvents on the petition of other creditors, and the usual order was made vesting their estate and effects in the Official Assignee. On an application on behalf of the Official Assignee for an order releasing the property from attachment, the Court ordered the prohibitory order to be set aside, and the property attached thereunder to be released. *BANK OF BENGAL v. 15. Vesting order—Priority of claim of Official Assignee.—A creditor attached before judgment certain of his debtor's property. Between the date of attachment and the date of the decree subsequently obtained by the creditor, the property of the debtor became vested in the Official Assignee under a vesting order. The Official Assignee brought a suit to remove the attachment, and for an injunction restraining the sale of the property. The Court of first instance decreed the suit in favour of the Official Assignee. On the case coming up before a Full Bench, Held per McDONNELL, TOTTENHAM, and PRINSEP, JJ., that where there has been an attachment prior to decree, and the property of a judgment-debtor subsequently becomes vested in the Official Assignee in insolvency previous to the decree, the vesting order will prevent such an attaching creditor from executing his decree against the property. Per GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J., contra, that under the 84th Chapter of Act XIV of 1882, the Court had no power to remove the attachment before judgment or stay the sale at the instance of the Official Assignee. *SHIB KRISTO SHAHA CHOWDHRY v. 16. Insolvency of defendant whose property has been attached before judgment—Right of Official Assignee to attached property—Practice—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 278, 281, 351, and 487.—Plaintiffs filed a suit in a subordinate Court, and attached before judgment some moveable property of the defendant. Before the hearing of the suit, the defendant filed a petition in Bombay under the Insolvency Act, and a vesting order was made. Held that the Official Assignee was entitled by an application to the Court, in which the suit was filed, to have the attachment raised before the defendant was declared an insolvent. Where a vesting order is made after attachment, and before decree, the title of the Official Assignee takes effect, and prevents the attaching creditor from obtaining satisfaction of his decree by a sale. In such a case, the Official Assignee can move by an ordinary motion instead of a regular suit. Jaya v. Jadawji, 1 Bom.,

17. Attachment under decree—Priority of Official Assignee.—Where money due to the judgment-debtor was attached in the hands of the Administrator General in execution of a decree, and afterwards, before any further steps were taken by the attaching creditor, the judgment-debtor filed his schedule in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and the usual vesting order was made, Held that the Official Assignee had priority over the attaching creditor under Act VIII of 1859. *ROY CHUNDER ROY v. 18. Priority of Official Assignee—Execution-creditor under decree of Small Cause Court.—On the 22nd July A brought an action in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes against the members of the firm of B & Co., and obtained judgment on the same day. On the 23rd July property belonging to B & Co. was seized by a bailiff of the Court in execution of the decree. On the 26th July the members of the firm of B & Co. were adjudicated insolvents, and the usual vesting order was made. On the 30th July the Official Assignee gave notice to the seizing bailiff of his claim to the property seized. Held (per NORMAN, J., on a reference from the Small Cause Court) that the Official Assignee was entitled to the property in priority to A. COCHRANE v. GLADSTONE, WYLLIE & CO.

[2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 337]

19. Priority of Official Assignee as against execution-creditor.—The Official Assignee of the Insolvent Court is entitled, under the vesting order, to possession of the insolvent's estate, even when that estate has been attached in execution of a decree, and an order directing the sale of it has been passed. But if a sale has taken place before the vesting order, the property in the subject of the attachment has passed from the judgment-debtor to the auction-purchaser, and the proceeds of the sale are primarily charged with the satisfaction of the decree or decrees in execution of which the sale has been made. *SARKIS v. 20. Official Assignee—Priority.—A obtained a decree against B, and in execution attached property of B in Zillah Dinagore in January 1868, which was sold on the 19th of March. In the meantime B had been adjudicated an insolvent, and the usual vesting order was made on March 6th. Notice of this order reached the Judge of Dinagore after the sale, but before the sale had been confirmed and the proceeds handed over. Held that the Official Assignee was entitled to the proceeds of the sale. *INDRA CHANDRA DOGAR v. 21. — Execution-creditor—Official Assignee.—The property of A was attached under a decree obtained by B. After the attachment, but prior to the sale, A was adjudicated an insolvent, and the usual vesting order was made. On the following day the agents of the Sheriff, by the order of the Official Assignee, sold the property attached for the recovery of the amount of B's decree, etc., and the proceeds of the sale were handed over by them to the Official Assignee. Subsequently the petition of the insolvent was dismissed. Immediately thereupon, on the same day, C, another execution-creditor, attached the proceeds of sale in the hands of the Official Assignee. B applied to the Court to order the Official Assignee to hand over the proceeds to the credit of his cause. On the same day A filed a fresh petition in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and a second vesting order was made. C claimed that the proceeds of sale should be handed over to him. Held that B was entitled to have the proceeds paid to him. WINTER v. GARTNER

[1 B. L. R., O. C., 79]

22. — Priority of Official Assignee—Vesting order—Attachment of money in execution of decree.—In execution of a decree of the Small Cause Court, certain goods belonging to the judgment-debtor, together with a sum of Rs 227 in cash, were seized on the 22nd November; and on the 30th, the Rs 227, together with the proceeds of sale of some of the goods, were placed to the credit of the decree-holder in the books of the Court. On the 25th November, the judgment-debtor was declared an insolvent, and by a vesting order of the same date his estate was transferred to the Official Assignee. Held that the execution was complete by the seizure of the money, and the Official Assignee was not entitled to the sum of Rs 227 as against the execution-creditor. GEISE CHANDRA ROY v. PRABHANNA KUMAR CHINA

[4 B. L. R., O. C., 94]

23. — Priority of Official Assignee—Vesting order—Sale in execution of decree—Auction-purchaser.—In September 1867, A obtained a decree against B, and on 12th January 1868 caused a piece of land to be attached in execution. On 17th April 1868, it was sold by order of the Zillah Judge, and bought by C. Before this, however, the judgment-debtor B had filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and on the 6th March 1868 a vesting order was made. On 24th July 1868, the Official Assignee sold the premises by the order of the Insolvent Court. The purchaser at the last-mentioned sale now sued to recover the property from the purchaser at the sale in execution of A's decree. Held (per COUCH, C.J., BAILEY, KEMP, and JACKSON, JJ.) that the vesting order passed the property to the Official Assignee, subject to being divested by a sale in execution of the decree; that the sale in execution by order of the Zillah Judge was legal, notwithstanding the vesting order; that the purchaser at the sale by order of the Insolvent Court had no right to recover it from him. The attaching creditor had a right to have the attached property sold, and the money realized by the sale paid to him. Per PRABH, J.—The jurisdiction of the Zillah Judge to order the sale was not affected by the vesting order; but before making the order for sale, the Official Assignee should be heard; and unless special reason be shown upon the Official Assignee's application, the execution-proceedings should be stayed or set aside. In the present case it must be assumed that the Judge made the order for sale in due course, and consequently that sale operated to pass the property out of the hands of the Official Assignee into those of the auction-purchaser. ANAND CHANDRA PAL v. PANCHILAL SUBMA

In the same case it was afterwards held by the Division Bench that the title of the purchaser at a sale by the Official Assignee at the instance and with the concurrence of certain persons who held a mortgage on the property, dated 30th September 1866, on which they had obtained a decree for sale, did not prevail over the title of the attaching creditor at the sale in execution of his decree. ANAND CHANDRA PAL v. PUNCKEE LAL SOON

24. — Execution-creditor, Right of, against Official Assignee—Payment of proceeds of sale into Court.—A obtained a decree against B on 15th August 1870 and an order for execution thereof on 8th September. In pursuance of such order, the Sheriff attached certain property belonging to B; and by order of Court of 14th September the Sheriff was directed to sell the property so attached, and the sale was fixed for the 1st December. On 30th November, B filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and the usual vesting order was made. On 1st December, the property was sold by the Sheriff under the order of 14th September, and the proceeds were paid into Court. Held that the execution-creditor was entitled as against the Official Assignee to be paid out of the proceeds. *AGA MAHOMED ALI SHEKRAJI v. The insolvency of the debtor introduces a new state of things from the date of the insolvency, but as regards sums accrued due prior to the date of the insolvency, the order under s. 295 creates rights which are not affected by the insolvency. *Soobal Chander Law v. 26. — Partnership—Insolvency of one partner—Vesting order—Subsequent decree against insolvent and attachment of the firm property in execution—Claim by Official Assignee to set aside attachment—Civil Procedure Code (1859), ss. 278-283.—The defendant was the manager of a joint Hindu family, consisting of himself and two nephews carrying on a family business in Bombay, Madras, and other places. In a suit brought in the High Court of Bombay against him as manager of the said joint family, a decree was passed on the 11th April 1896, which was in terms against the defendant alone. On the same day certain property in Bombay, in which (as found by the Judge) the nephews and the defendant were jointly interested, was attached in execution of the decree. Two days previously, however, viz., on the 9th April 1896, the defendant had been adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvent Court at Madras under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21). On the 6th May 1896, the Official Assignee took out a summons to have the attachment removed. Held that the claim of the Official Assignee must prevail and the property be released from attachment. As at the time of the claim of the Official Assignee the defendant's schedule had not been filed, the claim was therefore governed by s. 278 and the following sections of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). As at the time of the attachment the defendant's interest in the property had by the vesting order been completely divested from him and vested in the Official Assignee, the property was in his possession partly on account of the Official Assignee and partly on account of the solvent partners of his firm; that is, wholly on account of other persons. All his property and all he could honestly dispose of, whether for his own benefit or for the benefit of the joint family, had prior to the attachment passed to the Official Assignee, and consequently there was nothing which the decree-holder could attach and sell. Where subsequently to the insolvency of one of several partners a decree is obtained against the firm and property of the firm is attached in execution, such attachment should be removed. By allowing the execution, the solvent partners abandon their right of administering the joint estate, and in the interest of the joint creditors the decree-holder must be restrained from going on with the execution, and the partnership assets will be applied by the Insolvent Court in paying the joint creditors rateably, the Official Assignee receiving the insolvent's share of the surplus, and the rest being handed over to the solvent partners. SARDAR-MAL JAGONATH v. 3. RIGHT OF ELECTION AS TO LEASEHOLD PROPERTY.

27. ——— Right of Official Assignee to accept or disclaim leasehold property—Effect of taking possession—Liability for rent.—The Official Assignee has the right to elect whether he will accept or repudiate onerous (e.g., leasehold) property belonging to an insolvent and as such vesting in the Official Assignee under the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21). Except under exceptional circumstances, the taking of possession of leasehold property by the Official Assignee is proof of election on his part to take the lease. A held certain premises in Bombay from the plaintiff as a monthly tenant at a rent of Rs 125, with liberty to either party to terminate the tenancy on giving one month's notice. On the 9th April 1896, A was adjudicated insolvent by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Madras, and on that day the usual vesting order was made vesting all his estate and effects in the defendant as Official Assignee. On the 20th August 1896, the Sheriff, who had taken possession of the premises in execution of a decree passed against A, handed over possession of them to the agent of the defendant, who remained in possession until the 30th September 1896, when he gave them up to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant for the rent (Rs 750) due from 1st April 1896 to the 30th September 1896. Held that the defendant was liable. By entering into possession on the 30th August 1896, the defendant had elected to accept the lease and had thereby become assignee of it. The acceptance dated back to the vesting order, and the Official Assignee (the defendant) became liable for the rent during the period that he continued to be assignee, his liability ending when with the landlord's consent he surrendered the term. ABDUL BAZAR v. 28. ——— Validity of sale against Official Assignee—Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21—Rights of purchaser.—When a tenant of land owing arrears of tirvai (rent) takes the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21, the Official Assignee must elect, and express his election, to take the land cum onere, otherwise he acquires no interest in it. Where such election has not been made, and a suit for possession is brought by a purchaser at an auction-sale held by the revenue authorities for the arrears, the insolvent cannot plead a jus tertii in the assignee. CHINNA SUBBARAYA MUDALI v. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59 and 60—Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21.—A decree for arrears of rent of an under-tenure was obtained against a tenant who became an insolvent, and whose tenure became vested in the Official Assignee by virtue of the provisions of the Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict., s. 21. An application was made under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Law, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, for an order that the tenure should be sold for its own arrears. The Official Assignee objected to the sale, and contended that the decree-holder's only right was to prove in the insolvency for the amount of his debt. Held that, whether the arrears of rent became due before or after the insolvency of the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder was entitled to sell the tenure in execution of his decree. CHUNDER NARAIN SINGH v. On an application by the Official Assignee that the suit should be adjourned, and the Official Assignee be added as a party, the Court held that he had a right to intervene, and an order was made postponing the hearing of the suit for a month to enable the Official Assignee to institute a suit on the note. *KELLY v. Accordingly, the Official Assignee is not entitled to claim such salary or income except by means of an order obtained under s. 27 of the Act, nor such personal earnings at all unless and until in either case the insolvent has accumulated a margin beyond what has been required for his adequate support. An attachment upon the salary of a railway servant ceases to be operative after he has filed his petition in insolvency, and should be withdrawn on notice being given of the making of the vesting order. IN THE MATTER OF DONAGHUE. I. It appeared that the insolvent had been adjudicated in 1888, and had received her personal discharge in 1890, and had obtained the house in question under a deed of gift in April 1891, and had died intestate in May 1892, having never obtained a discharge under s. 59. The mortgagees took their mortgage with notice of the insolvency of the mortgagor. The Official Assignee did not become aware that the insolvent had acquired the property in question till September 1892, when he intervened and claimed the property free from the mortgage. Held that the Official Assignee was entitled to the mortgaged property free from the mortgage. *ROWLANDSON v. s. 28.—An insolvent, J A, executed the following document in Calcutta, dated May 16th, 1867, in favour of M L & Co. : "Dear Sirs,—In consideration of your having advanced to me the sum of Rs. 700, I hereby assign to you the whole of the furniture and fittings now lying at my house, Fairy Hall, Dum-Dum, the whole of which I declare to be my property, free and unencumbered, and hereby authorize you to proceed to a sale of the said property by auction, should I fail to refund the amount of Rs. 700 on or before the 10th day of July next." The document was duly stamped and registered under s. 53 of the Registration Act. J A failed to pay the Rs. 700; and on the following day, M L & Co. placed a durwan, their own servant, on the premises at Fairy Hall, to assert their right to the possession of the furniture and to prevent its removal without their permission. An inventory was being made, and other steps taken preparatory to a sale. J A continued to reside in the house, and to use and enjoy the furniture as before, with the knowledge and consent of M L & Co. Before any sale took place, J A filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and the usual vesting order was made. Held that the furniture was in the "possession, order, and disposition" of the insolvent within the meaning of s. 28 of the Insolvent Act. IN THE MATTER OF AGABEG

B & Co., that they should be met and paid out of the sale-proceeds of the goods, "which were thereupon specially appropriated thereto;" that Sm. & Co. and B & Co. subsequently suspended payment,—namely, in December 1866 and January 1867; that in February 1867 B & Co. filed their petition in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Calcutta, having previously delivered a portion of the goods, and endorsed the bills of lading for the remainder to J S & Co., who had notice of the insolvent state of Sm. & Co. and B & Co., without any consideration and without the consent or authority of St. & Co., although the acceptances had not been met or returned, or the goods in any way paid for; that the proceeds arising from the sale of the goods had been handed over by J S & Co. to J C, who threatened and intended to apply the same in payment of the general body of creditors of B & Co. St. & Co. prayed that the rights of the parties to the suit might be declared; that an account might be taken of what had been received by J C in respect of the proceeds of such sale; that J C might be directed to pay to St. & Co. what on taking such account might be found due to them; that a receiver might be appointed; that meanwhile J C might be restrained by injunction from paying over the same to any one except St. & Co. On the case coming on for settlement of issues, the suit was dismissed by NORMAN, J., on the ground that, from the facts alleged in the plaint, the inference was that the goods were in the possession, order, and disposition of B & Co., as reputed owners, with the consent of St. & Co., within the meaning of s. 23 of the Insolvent Act; and therefore the goods and the sale-proceeds rightly passed to J C as assignee; and further that the Court had not jurisdiction to declare the rights of all parties as prayed for; that the cause of action did not wholly arise within the jurisdiction, and it was not shown that leave had been granted to institute the suit. Held on appeal that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the plaint sufficiently disclosed a cause of action. St. & Co. had a right to have it tried whether they had an equitable charge upon the proceeds for the purpose of paying the bills. STERLING v. and M & Co. had a one-third share between them; that the whole of the goods were purchased and paid for by C & Co.; that at the time the acceptances were given, it was distinctly agreed upon by all the parties that the bills should be met and paid out of the sale-proceeds of the goods, "which were there-upon specifically appropriated thereto;" that S & Co. subsequently suspended payment in December 1866 and B & Co. in January 1867; that in February 1867 B & Co. filed their petition in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Calcutta, having previously sold a portion of the goods, and delivered the remainder to J S & Co., as agents, for sale on account of C & Co., and the other parties interested, J S & Co. being instructed by B & Co. to hold the same to a separate account of B & Co.; that J S & Co. had received the proceeds of the sale of the whole of the goods; that the proceeds arising from the sale had been handed over by J S & Co. to J C., who threatened and intended to apply the same in payment of the general body of creditors of B & Co. C & Co. prayed that rights of the parties to the suit might be declared; that an account might be taken of what had come into the hands of J C. in respect of the goods; that J C. might be declared answerable to C & Co. for the amount which should be found to be due to them on such account; that C & Co. might be declared entitled to the sum so found due for the price of the goods and other payments made by them on account of the goods; that J C. might be directed to pay to C & Co. what should be found to be due to them on taking an account; that the proceeds might be directed to be paid amongst the parties to the suit, according to their respective shares and interests therein; and that, in the meantime, J C. might be restrained, by injunction, from paying over the same to any one except C & Co. On the case coming on for settlement of issues, the suit was dismissed by NORMAN, J., on the ground that the Court had not jurisdiction to declare the rights of parties as prayed, and no cause of action was disclosed against the Official Assignee. Held on appeal the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the plaint sufficiently disclosed a cause of action. C & Co. had a right to have the question tried whether, by the alleged arrangement, the proceeds of the goods were specifically appropriated to payment for the goods, and the Court had clearly jurisdiction to compel J C., the Official Assignee, to apply the proceeds, as far as they may have been specifically appropriated. *COLLIER v. In the event of S & Co. being brought under cash advances, J S B & B. agree to find cash to the extent of one-third the amount." In 1863 J S B., one of the members of the firm of J S B & B., retired from the firm, which was carried on under the name of T B & Bro., and the agreement of 1862 was continued by that firm with the two other firms of S & Co. and B & Co. Under it certain goods were, in September, October, and November 1866, purchased by the plaintiff and shipped to B & Co., on triplicate account, and bills were drawn by the plaintiff on S & Co. as agreed, and were deposited with A C & Co., not with O G & Co. On the 2nd January 1867, in consideration of the plaintiff taking on himself all the risk attaching to the said goods, S & Co. and B & Co. transferred all their right, title, and interest in the said goods to the plaintiff. This agreement was signed on behalf of B & Co. by L B. in his own name, one of the members of the firm then in London, who stated that he had the authority of his partners for so doing. On this agreement being made, B & Co., by the direction of the plaintiff, handed over the goods and documents relating thereto to B B & Co., of Calcutta, on the 16th January 1867. B & Co. stopped payment on the 27th December 1866, and J H B., the only partner of that firm then in Calcutta, filed his petition in the Insolvent Court there on the 7th February 1867. L B. filed his petition in the said Court on the 18th May 1867. S & Co. stopped payment in December 1866. On the 16th March 1867, an order of the Insolvent Court was made in the matter of the petition of J H B., and in pursuance of this order B B & Co. delivered to the defendant, as Official Assignee of the estate of the said J H B., the unsold goods in their hands, which had been transferred to them by B & Co., and the net proceeds of those which they had sold. Held by NORMAN, J., that the agreement of January 2nd was fraudulent and void against the creditors of B & Co., under 13 Eliz., c. 5, if not void under s. 24 of the Insolvent Act. On appeal, held by PRACOCK, C.J., that the goods were sent to B & Co. on a special trust, and there was a specific appropriation of the proceeds binding in the case either in the insolvency or bankruptcy; that the agreement of January 2nd was valid and binding on the assignees of B & Co., that by it the property in the goods passed to T B & Bro.; but if it did not, the proceeds were specifically appropriated to taking up the bills of B & Co. on S & Co.; and until they were paid, B & Co. had no interest in the goods which could justify their assignees in stopping the remittance of the proceeds or of taking the property out of the possession of B B & Co.; that the plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds with interest from the time the proceeds and goods were handed over to the assignee, and that the goods were not in the order and disposition of J H B at the time of his filing his petition within s. 23 of the Insolvent Act. Per MARKBY, J.—Each of the two firms and Barlow were in the outset part owners of these goods, and each became liable to the others to contribute his share towards the cost price thereof. In November 1866 there ceased to be a binding agreement to remit the proceeds to O G & Co., and no new agreement was substituted. The agreement of 2nd January did not renew the right to have the proceeds remitted for special appropriation, and it was, moreover, a fraudulent preference and void so far as B & Co. were concerned. On 16th January, when the goods were transferred to the plaintiff, he was merely a creditor, and therefore a transfer for his benefit, within two months of filing the petition of insolvency, was void under s. 24 of the Insolvent Act. *BARLOW v. Affirmed by the Privy Council, where it was held that a firm, though insolvent, may part with or put an end to a current speculation, the result of which is still uncertain, on the best terms procurable, without any imputation of fraud; so also the abandonment of a speculation whilst the result is uncertain may be both honest and politic, as it entirely differs from undue preference of one creditor to others after a debt has been incurred. *MILLER v. 41. Insolvent Act, s. 24.—On the night previous to B's being adjudicated insolvent, about 10 P.M., the firm of R B D, at their place of business, promised to give B a loan of Rs. 5,000 if he would the next morning deliver to them goods to that amount, and would, in the meantime, satisfy them that he had sufficient goods in his godown, and allow the firm of R B D to put their lock on the door of the godown to secure the goods until they had received the value of the loan. Thereupon B took the gomastah of the firm of R B D to his godown, let him see that it contained goods worth more than Rs. 5,000, and allowed him to put a lock on the door, B at the same time replacing his own locks. The gomastah and B then returned to the office of R B D, where Rs. 5,000 were paid to B, who promised to deliver the next morning Rs. 5,000 worth of goods out of the godown which had been locked up. Having received the money, B absconded from Calcutta that same night, and never returned to his place of business. The next day he was adjudicated an insolvent. Held that the goods in the godown were not in the order and disposition of B within the meaning of s. 24 of the Insolvent Act. *IN THE MATTER OF BUNGSEEDHAR KHETTRY. No transfer was executed, and no notice of the assignment was given to the company, which subsequently went into liquidation. N became insolvent. B sued the liquidators of the company for the amount due in respect of the five shares on the first distribution of assets. Held that at the time of N's insolvency the plaintiff was the true owner of the shares within the meaning of s. 23 of the Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), and that, as he had omitted to give notice to the company of the assignment to him, and as he had procured no transfer to be executed in his favour which the company, under their articles of association, were bound to recognize, he had consented that the shares should remain in the order and disposition of N, and consequently the shares and the right to receive any distribution of assets in respect of them vested, upon N's insolvency, in the Official Assignee. Semble—The principle that a person who is under an obligation to convey property to another is, in a Court of equity, a trustee of such property, for the latter does not apply in cases where the reputed ownership clause of the Insolvent Act is in question. Ex-parte Littledale, 6 DeGex, M. & G., 714, and In re Sketchley, 1 DeGex & J., 168, followed. *BHAVAN MULJI v. The articles remained for some months in the custody of D M, who then re-delivered them to M for sale on commission, the proceeds to be applied in liquidation of the debt. M gave a receipt for the articles, and some of them were sold by M on those terms. On the 2nd of May 1877, M filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and such of the articles as remained unsold came into the possession of the Official Assignee. On an application by D M claiming the articles and praying for an order directing the Official Assignee to return them, it was alleged that it was customary for European jewellers in Calcutta to receive articles on commission sale, and it was contended that such receipt did not divest the true owners of possession. Held the articles were rightly vested in the Official Assignee. On the facts, the insolvent was the true owner of the goods. D M's interest ceased when he ceased to have possession of the goods; the receipt in this view only amounted to an agreement to sell and apply the proceeds in liquidation of the debt, and it could have been proved and a dividend recovered on it under the insolvency. Even if the interest of D M did not cease, the goods were in the order and disposition of the insolvent, there being nothing to show any

44. ————— Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), s. 28—Reputed ownership—Possession—Consent of true owner—Partner out of jurisdiction—Mortgage of chattels—Priority.—In 1878 the members of the firm of A & Co. mortgaged the live and dead stock, chattels, and effects belonging to the firm to B, the mortgage-deed containing a clause to the effect that, as long as there was anything due on the mortgage, the mortgaged property should be treated and considered as the property and in the order and disposition of the mortgagee. A & Co. subsequently obtained further advances from B; at this time A was residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and the instruments creating the further charges were signed by his attorney. C and D, the two members of the firm residing in Calcutta, remained in possession of the mortgaged property up to the 10th May 1880, when they became insolvent, and their property was vested in the Official Assignee, who entered into possession. On the 12th May, the mortgagee also entered into possession. On the 26th June, A, the remaining partner of the firm, returned to Calcutta and filed his petition of insolvency. Upon a petition by the mortgagee claiming to be paid his mortgage-money in priority to the other creditors of the firm,—Held that the goods and chattels of the firm which were covered by the mortgage and further charges did not vest in the Official Assignee upon the insolvency of C and D. *Reynolds v. on default by the mortgagor the mortgagee should have power to enter the premises and deal with the goods as his own. A durwan was placed in charge, and in January 1884 the mortgagor defaulted and was pressed for payment at different times previous to August 1884. On the 1st August, the mortgagee sent to the premises people from Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall & Co. for the purpose of lotting and cataloguing the furniture. Admittance into the house was refused to them by B, although they were admitted into the compound by the durwan of the mortgagee. At about this date (but whether before or after the 1st August was not clear) B asked for further time for payment, which was granted. On the 4th August, the furniture was attached by V in execution of a decree for rent. On the 6th August, B filed his petition in insolvency, and on the 15th September the furniture was sold by the Official Assignee. On a hearing of the claims put in by the mortgagee and V,—Held that on the 6th August the furniture was not in the possession, order, or disposition of B as reputed owner with the consent of the true owner; that under the circumstances brought out in evidence, the fact that further time for payment was granted had not the effect of a fresh consent on the part of the mortgagee to the goods being in the possession of B as reputed owner; that even if this had been so, the attachment under V's execution took the goods out of the order and disposition of B, and that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of that circumstance. *In re Agabeg, 2 Ind. "If you do not arrange for renewal or payment of them, we must stop payment;" G & Co., knowing that they were insolvent, but for the purpose of delay, and not for any benefit to the estate, agreed to mortgage to T & Co. what was substantially the whole of the estate. T & Co. renewed the bills, and the bills again falling due, and G & Co. being unable to meet them, T & Co. paid them. Shortly afterwards G & Co. filed their petition of insolvency, without having carried out the agreement. In November, B, finding that the limit of the discount accommodation had been exceeded and the cash account overdrawn, declined to discount any more bills unless security were given for the amount then due to the Bank. A, the only partner in the firm of C N & Co., then in Calcutta, verbally promised on 24th November to deposit with the Bank the title-deeds of the premises in which C N & Co. carried on their business; and in consideration of such promise B discounted further bills from 24th to 29th November. A sent to B a letter on 25th November as follows: "In pursuance of the conversation the writer had with you yesterday, we now deposit the title-deeds of landed house property as security against our discount account." The letter enclosed certain title-deeds, of which B acknowledged the receipt. B subsequently discovered they were not the title-deeds which A had promised to deposit, and of this he gave A notice by letter on 28th November. C N & Co., on 5th November 1870, suspended payment, and by the usual order their estate and effects vested in the Official Assignee, who thereupon, finding that the Bank claimed a lien on the deeds, brought a suit against the Bank for recovery of them. Held that the deposit of the title-deeds was not void under s. 24 of the Insolvent Act. MILLER v. In the same case before the Privy Council, a firm, trading in Calcutta, having been there adjudicated insolvent, the transfer of a debt, transferred by one of its branches located in Lucknow, was held upon the evidence to have been a voluntary assignment, void under s. 24 of the Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, as against the Official Assignee. A draft, dated of the day on which at night the insolvent firm stopped payment in Calcutta, adjudication having followed on the second day after, purported to have been drawn by a debtor owing money to the Lucknow branch under its assignment in favour of the defendant to the amount of such debt. The latter received the money. Held that, under all the circumstances, it was not necessary to decide whether the transfer was made on the date which the draft purported to bear, the conclusion upon all the facts being that the debt had been transferred "voluntarily" within the meaning of s. 24. MILLER v. at Bombay, which contained the following passage: "Upon you a jekhmi hundi is drawn, the particulars whereof are as follows: (Rs. 4,000.) The value having been received from Jadowji Gopalji, hundis for Rs. 4,000 drawn against 29 bags of sheep's wool shipped on board the 'Hariprasad,' owner Dayal Morarji, from the seaport town of Tuna On the safe arrival of the vessel do you be good enough to land the goods and deliver the same to Jadowji Gopalji; and as to the jekhmi hundis drawn before, if in respect thereof any money has to be paid to Jadowji Gopalji, do you be good enough to pay the same." The above letter was duly presented by the plaintiffs to L's Bombay firm on the 27th December 1878. Evidence was given that, at the time the plaintiffs obtained the hundi and the letter, the goods referred to had been already shipped. On the 1st January 1879, the firm of L was adjudicated insolvent by the High Court of Bombay. On the 5th January 1879, the ship arrived at Bombay with the goods in question on board, and on the 7th January the ship-owners delivered them to the Official Assignee. In a suit against the Official Assignee (as assignee of the estate and effects of L) and the ship-owners to recover possession of the wool or the amount of the hundi,—Held, on the authority of Burn v. Carralho, & M. & Co., 702, that the letter of the 22nd December 1878 operated as an equitable assignment of the wool to the plaintiffs, on the safe arrival of the vessel, as a security for the payment of the hundi, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to obtain possession of the wool. JADOWJI GOPALJI v. On the night of the previous day, the 11th March, one of the creditors of the firm, the impending bankruptcy of the firm having become known, urged the latter to make over a part of their stock-in-trade as security for the debt, and to this the insolvents consented. The only pressure which appeared to have been exercised was that on the 11th March security was demanded from the insolvents. Held that, there having been no pressure which could not be resisted, and no legal proceedings having existed against the insolvents, or which they could have feared, the transaction was a voluntary transfer, and therefore void under s. 24 of 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21. PHULCHAND v. 55. ————— Mortgage to secure a barred debt since renewed—Fraudulent preference—Voluntary transfer—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 344, 351.—On 1st January 1886 a partnership theretofore existing between A and B was dissolved and the deed of dissolution provided, inter alia, for the execution by B on demand of a mortgage on the plantation house (then subject to a subsisting mortgage in favour of the Agra Bank) to secure the repayment of a debt due by the firm to the trustees of A's marriage settlement. A suit against the firm was pending at the date of the deed of dissolution, and it was dismissed by the Court of first instance, and an appeal was preferred to the High Court. Before the appeal came on for hearing, the debt to A's trustees was barred by limitation, but A by a letter consented to pay it, and the trustees demanded the execution of the mortgage as agreed on and offered to pay off the Bank. Shortly afterwards, viz., in December 1888, the appeal came on in the High Court, which held that the appellant's claim was valid and called on the Court of first instance for a further finding. On 2nd January 1889, B executed a mortgage of the plantation house in pursuance of the above agreement, and in June the trustees paid off the Bank. In April, the High Court in the above appeal passed a decree for the appellant. In consequence of this decree, B became involved in pecuniary difficulties: in October he found himself insolvent, and ceased to carry on business, and in February 1890 applied under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 344, to be declared an insolvent. His application was opposed by the holders of the High Court decree on the ground that the mortgage of 2nd January 1889 had been executed with the object of defeating their claim. Held that the execution of the mortgage of January 1889 afforded no reason for rejecting the application under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 351, since it was supported by consideration and did not amount to an act of fraudulent preference, not being a voluntary transfer. *Butcher v. 56. ————— Mortgage by trading partnership of all its assets when solvent for advances present and future—Change of partners with continuance of mortgage liability—Validity of mortgage security.—If a trader assigns all his property, except on some substantial contemporaneous payment or substantial undertaking to make a subsequent payment, that is an act of insolvency, and is void against the creditors on his insolvency, simply because nothing is left wherewith to carry on the business; whereas, if he receives such assistance, something is left to carry on the business. A trading partnership, before its insolvency, assigned by mortgage all its assets to a creditor, who simultaneously made a substantial advance to the firm, agreeing to make future advances. Held that the mortgage would have covered such assets of the then firm as were in existence at the time of the insolvency, and would not have been void, as against the other creditors and the Official Assignee, because the assistance was substantial, and the then solvent firm was not left by the assignment without means. Another question was raised upon the facts that, after the mortgage and before the insolvency, new partners entered the firm, and new stock-in-trade was brought in. The new partners were to be under the same liability to the secured creditors, the security continuing with respect to the new firm and the after-acquired stock, as it stood with respect to the old. Held that this arrangement did not invalidate the prior security, amounting as it did to a mere substitution of persons and goods at the time of the change. Also the incoming partners received substantial consideration; for, although the obligation, under the former agreement with the old firm, for the rest of the advances not then made was remitted, a new obligation was entered into that a sum of money should be provided, which was afterwards supplied. The incoming partners got the benefit of a suretyship which the mortgagees had entered into for the former firm. These were the considerations to the incoming partners at the time. As the original contract would have been, the new one was, valid against the Official Assignee. KHO KWAT SIEW v. WOOL TAIK HWAT

57. — Assignment of stock in trade—Equitable lien—Preferential creditor—Insolvency, Act of—Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), s. 9.—An insolvent in debt to a bank had given a promissory note for the full amount of the debt due. He also gave, by way of collateral security for the promissory note and for any future advances, a letter of lien over his stock-in-trade, etc., and undertook at the time to execute, whenever called upon to do so, an assignment of his business. This undertaking was never carried out. Two years and three months from the date of the loan the insolvent had addressed a letter to the Bank enclosing a cheque for Rs600, and requesting that it should be placed to the credit of the loan account. Held that, as regards the amount of the debt secured by the letter of hypothecation, the Bank was entitled to rank as preferential creditor, such letter creating a good equitable charge on existing assets. The assignment contemplated by the letter of hypothecation amounted to an act of insolvency within the meaning of s. 9, Insolvent Debtors' Act, and created no equity available as against the Official Assignee. IN THE MATTER OF SUMMERS averred that he held an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds with him, before the adjudication, as security for the debt. Held that the burden was upon the plaintiff of proving the deposit by way of equitable mortgage to have preceded the adjudication. The Courts below having differed as to whether this prior possession had or had not been proved, an examination of the evidence led to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the title-deeds had been deposited before the date of the adjudication as alleged by him. On the question whether the Courts below should, or should not, have received in evidence the testimony of a witness who had been informed by the plaintiff before the adjudication that documents relating to land had then been deposited with him as security by the person who was afterwards insolvent and who was the first defendant in this suit,—Held that this, being an admission by a party within s. 21 of the Evidence Act, 1872, could not be used as evidence in the plaintiff's favour. And Held that an erroneous omission to object to the admission of such testimony did not make it available as a ground of judgment. MILLER v. MADHO DAS

73. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 273—Mala fides.—C D repaired P's ship on his express representation that the repairs would be paid for by a letter of credit which the owners had sent for that purpose. P applied the funds to the payment of other creditors. C D sued him for the amount of the repairs, and obtained a decree, in execution of which P was imprisoned. The Court having refused to give him his discharge under s. 273 of Act VIII of 1859, he appealed. Held on appeal that a person who gets work done on the representation that it is to be paid for out of certain specific funds, which funds he afterwards applies in paying sums due to other creditors, is guilty of mala fides and of giving undue preference, and is therefore not entitled to his discharge under s. 273 of Act VIII of 1859. PASSMORE v. 88. — Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 351—Insolvent judgment-debtor.—A judgment-debtor applied to be declared an insolvent. Certain of the claims against him were claimed under decrees. The Court of first instance refused the application, notwithstanding the statements in the application were substantially true, and the applicant had not committed any act of bad faith mentioned in s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the applicant had contracted the debts for which such decrees had been made dishonestly, and that section gave the Court in such a case a discretionary power to refuse the application. Held that the Court of first instance had taken an erroneous view of s. 351, and had assumed a wider discretion than the law conferred on it. If a person making an application to be declared an insolvent has not brought himself within cl. (a), (b), (c), or (d) of that section, then the Court has no discretion on other grounds to refuse the application. The bad faith, the reckless contracting of debts, the unfair preference of creditors, the transfer, removal, or concealment of property, the making false statements in the application, are all dealt with in s. 351, and are intended to confine the category of acts of misconduct that will debar the applicant from obtaining the relief and protection he asks. SALAMAT ALI v. —In July 1878 a person was declared an insolvent under the provisions of Ch. XX of the Civil Procedure Code. Only one creditor then proved his debt, and no schedule was framed. This creditor having applied for the sale of property belonging to the insolvent, another creditor, in May 1883, applied to prove his debt and to have his name inserted in the schedule which the Court then ordered to be framed. Held that such application could not be treated as made under s. 353, as no schedule had been framed, but must be regarded as in the nature of a tender of proof of debt under s. 352. PARNADI LAL v. Notice was issued to the mortgagee, who failed to appear and prove his claim, and was consequently omitted from the schedule prepared under s. 353 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A receiver was appointed under s. 354; the whole of the property of the insolvent was made over to the receiver, including the nine fields mortgaged, which the insolvent held as tenant of the mortgagee. The receiver sold one out of the nine fields to satisfy the creditors entered in the schedule, and ultimately restored the remaining eight fields to the judgment-debtor. The mortgagee then sued to eject the judgment-debtor for default in payment of rent. The latter pleaded his discharge under s. 355. Held that the discharge did not affect the mortgage-debt, and that a receiver is bound, as a condition of dealing with mortgaged property, in every case to pay off the mortgage, even when the mortgagee has not sought to be placed in the schedule, the position of the mortgagee being essentially different from that of the unsecured creditor. *Case of Chetani v. He was declared an insolvent under that section, and the Naib of the Court was appointed a receiver on 22nd December 1883. The receiver proceeded under the direction of the Court to convert the property of the insolvent into money under s. 356 (a) of the Code. Certain immovable property was purchased by the petitioner Tukaram for Rs. 1,032 on 4th December 1884. Tukaram, after some time, presented an application, in which he stated that, inasmuch as the insolvent had not been arrested in execution of the decree obtained by Gangadhar, the Court had no jurisdiction; and he prayed that, if such was the case, the sale should be set aside, and the money returned to him. No appeal was preferred by the judgment-creditor, or other creditors of the insolvent, against the order of insolvency made under s. 351 of the Code. The Subordinate Judge referred the following question to the High Court, viz., "whether a Court which has declared the insolvency of a judgment debtor can direct the receiver to proceed under s. 356 of the Code and complete any sale, though the purchaser objects to the direction on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the Court, which objection seems to the Court to be valid, but too late?" Held that, as the declaration of insolvency was ultra vires, the Subordinate Judge should take no further steps to give effect to it, but leave the parties concerned to take such measures as they may be advised. GANGADHAR BRIVEAY v. 112. — Refusal to adjudicate debtor insolvent, Grounds for—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 351, Ch. XX. A Court cannot refuse the application of a judgment-debtor seeking to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of Ch. XX of the Civil Procedure Code unless it finds affirmatively that the applicant has brought himself within cl. (a), (b), (c), or (d) of s. 351 of the Code; and the fact that his schedule assets exceed his liabilities does not disentitle him to such relief. A judgment-debtor applied to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of Ch. XX of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge refused the application on the ground that the assets were admittedly in excess of the liabilities, and that he had made no effort for a period of two years to realize his property for the benefit of his creditors. Held that the District Judge was bound to grant the application, as the applicant had not brought himself within cl. and to be released. The Court passed an order on the same day, directing that he should be released, and that the creditor should proceed against his property. Held that the order was bad for want of notice. KOMARASAMI v. GOBINDU

118. — Unfair preference—Civil Procedure Code, 1892, s. 351.—A creditor can put pressure on his debtor to get payment of his claim, notwithstanding that the debtor may be in embarrassed circumstances. But a debtor, who gives an unfair preference to one creditor by giving him a large proportion of his property, so as to reduce the aliquot share of the other creditors, acts fraudulently, and no title is given to that particular creditor as against the assignees who represent the creditors generally. A filed a suit and obtained a decree against B. During the pendency of the suit, and only four days before the decree was passed, B assigned by way of mortgage nearly the whole of his property to one of his creditors, C. The assignment was made not to secure a fresh advance, but in consideration of past debts due to C. C was aware of B's embarrassments. Two years afterwards B was arrested in execution of A's decree. B thereupon applied to be declared an insolvent. Held that the assignment by B of nearly the whole of his property to C amounted, under the circumstances, to an unfair preference, within the meaning of s. 351, cl. (c), of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882). B was therefore not entitled to be declared an insolvent. DADAPA v. VISHNUDAS

119. — Judgment-debtor declared insolvent pending suit—Civil Procedure Code, s. 352—Suit to establish right to sell property in execution of decree enforcing hypothecation—Suit against purchasers not parties to decree—Decree-holder scheduling his decree under Civil Procedure Code, s. 352—Effect of schedule.—A suit to establish a right to bring to sale certain moveable property in execution of a decree for enforcement of hypothecation was brought against persons who were not parties to that decree and had purchased in execution of a prior decree. Pending the suit, one of the judgment-debtors under the hypothecation-decree was declared an insolvent, and the plaintiff scheduled his decree as a claim under s. 352 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that the scheduling of the decree had not the effect of superseding it or creating another decretal right in addition to and independent of it, and did not make the suit, which was founded on a new and different cause of action against persons who were not parties to the decree, unmaintainable. ABDUL RAHMAN v. 120. — Debt not in schedule—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 336, 337—Act VI of 1888—Execution of decree obtained against insolvent for such debt—Scheduled debts.—A person who has taken the benefit of the insolvent sections of the Civil Procedure Code, and who is undischarged, but has not inserted in his schedule a debt for which a decree is subsequently obtained, is not protected from arrest in execution of such decree merely because his property is in the hands of the receiver in insolvency. Such a person is liable to arrest under the circumstances, and in accordance with the procedure provided for by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VI of 1888). PANNA LALL v. KANHAIA LALL

121. — Civil Procedure Code, ss. 344, 350, 352, 357, 358—Omission to come in and prove debt.—A judgment-debtor arrested in execution of a decree filed his petition, and was adjudicated an insolvent under the insolvency sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the decree-holder was, among other creditors, called upon to prove her debt. She, however, omitted to attend, and her name was not included in the schedule of creditors. The insolvent was discharged under s. 355. The creditors who proved their debts were paid, and the residue of the property was paid out by the receiver to the insolvent. In an application by the decree-holder to execute her decree against the property of the insolvent, Held that the discharge of the insolvent did not operate as a discharge of the debt under s. 357 of the Civil Procedure Code, and she was therefore entitled to proceed with execution of her decree against the insolvent's property. Semble—Under s. 352, a creditor, by omitting to come in and prove his debt, would apparently prevent an insolvent obtaining the relief which the Code contemplates giving him, unless that section be read as allowing the insolvent to prove the debts of such creditors as omit to appear and prove them. HARO PRIA DABIA v. SHAMA CHARAN SEN

122. — Receiver selling a mortgaged property of insolvent—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 354, 355, and 356—Purchaser at such sale—Right of mortgagee unaffected by such sale.—By an order, dated the 9th July 1879, A was declared an insolvent under s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and his property vested in the receiver, who was ordered to convert it into money. Nine fields, which were part of A's property, had been mortgaged to the plaintiff, who was duly cited to appear and prove his debt. The plaintiff, however, failed to appear, and he was consequently omitted from the schedule of A's creditors. The receiver sold one of the fields which was purchased by A's undivided son, G. At the sale the plaintiff gave notice of his claim as mortgagee. After paying off the debts of the scheduled creditors, the receiver made over to A the residue of the purchase-money and the eight unsold fields. In 1881 the plaintiff sued A for possession of the mortgaged property, and on appeal obtained a decree. While that suit was pending, G sold to the defendant the field which he had purchased. In execution of his decree, the plaintiff recovered possession of the eight fields, but on attempting to get possession of the ninth field he was obstructed by the defendant, who was in possession, and he consequently brought this suit to recover it. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover it from the defendant. The only interest the insolvent had in the mortgaged premises was the equity of redemption, and this having vested in the receiver under s. 354, he under s. 356 was directed to convert it into money. & therefore at the sale only purchased the equity of redemption in the one field; and the defendant, who now stood in G's shoes with notice of the plaintiff's claim, although he might possibly be entitled to redeem the whole nine fields comprised in the mortgage, was bound to deliver possession to the plaintiff (the mortgagee) until that was done. The mortgaged property could not be sold by the receiver without the consent of the plaintiff (the mortgagee) or paying him off. S. 356 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) no doubt contemplates the payment of debts secured by mortgage out of the proceeds of the conversion of the insolvent's property in priority to the general creditors; but this must be taken in connection with s. 354, and must be understood as referring to those cases in which the mortgaged premises have been sold after coming to an understanding with the mortgagee. SHRIDHAR NARAYAN v. KRISHNAJI VITHOJI. I. L. R., 12 Bom., 272

123. Insolvent but undischarged judgment-debtor—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 351, 355, 356, and 357—Application by scheduled creditors to sell subsequently-acquired property of the insolvent.—The provisions of s. 357 of the Code of Civil Procedure are not applicable until the insolvent has been discharged under s. 351 or s. 355 of the Code. Hence where some of the scheduled creditors of a judgment-debtor, who had been declared an insolvent, and in respect of whose property a receiver had been appointed, but who had not been discharged, presented an application to the Court, purporting to be made under s. 357 of the Code of Civil Procedure praying for the sale of certain property which had come by inheritance to the judgment-debtor, and the Court, also purporting to act under s. 357 of the Code, made an order on such application allowing the property in question to be released from attachment on deposit by the insolvent of one-third of the scheduled debts, it was held that, although the Court might have acted under s. 356 of the Code, yet, as its order purported to be under s. 357, it was ultra vires and must be set aside. GANESE LAL v. MUSARRAT ALI. GIRWAR LAL v. MUSARRAT ALI

124. Application by judgment-debtor to be declared insolvent—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 344, 351, and 354—Order for sale of mortgaged property in execution—Sale in execution pending application—Effect of subsequent declaration of insolvency.—An order for the sale of mortgaged property had been made on the application of the mortgagee, who had got a decree, and before the sale had taken place, the mortgagor (judgment-debtor) applied to be made insolvent under

s. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Five months after the sale, he was duly declared an insolvent under s. 351. Held that the subsequent declaration of the mortgagor's insolvency did not affect the sale or render it illegal. No consequences in derogation of the ordinary rights of judgment-creditors follow from an application by the judgment-debtor under s. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is only when a receiver is appointed under s. 351 that the property of the insolvent vests in the receiver under s. 354, and the rights of the creditor are interfered with. It is not provided that such an order shall have any retrospective effect. ISHVAR LAKSHMI DAT v. HARIVAN RAMJI

125. Holder of decree on mortgage not entered amongst the scheduled creditors—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 344 et seqq.—Decree-holder not debarred from executing his decree.—Held that a judgment-creditor holding a decree for sale upon a mortgage against an insolvent judgment-debtor will not, by reason of his debt not having been scheduled in the insolvency proceedings, lose his right to execute his decree. HARO PRASAD DABIA v. SHAMA CHARAN SEN, I. L. R., 16 Cal., 592, and SHRIDHAR NARAYAN v. ATMARAM GOBIND, I. L. R., 7 Bom., 455, referred to. SHOBHAR SINGH v. GAURI SAMAI. I. L. R., 21 All., 227

126. Discharge of insolvent—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Ch. XX, ss. 344-360—Future earnings of insolvent, Power of Court to compel payments out of, towards liquidation of debts.—The function of the Court, acting under Ch. XX of the Code of Civil Procedure, is to compel insolvent debtors to pay their debts if it can, either by its compulsory process or, where that cannot be used, by withholding from them, when it has the power of doing so, the relief to which they might otherwise be considered entitled. The granting of an order of discharge under that chapter is to a certain extent discretionary with the Court, and if the Court be of opinion that an insolvent may reasonably be expected to possess an income accruing during the time of his insolvency and likely to continue, even if such income be from sources such that it could not be attached, it ought very seriously to consider whether under such circumstances it ought to exercise its power to discharge the insolvent, and not rather stay its hand and require him as a condition of such discharge to satisfy it by payments on account of his debts, that he really desires, so far as he can, honestly to discharge the debt that he owes. A Gyawal, who was in receipt of a very considerable income derived from offerings made by pilgrims, applied to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of Ch. XX of the Code of Civil Procedure. He was opposed by a judgment-creditor, who, inter alia, contended that the insolvent should be compelled to contribute out of his income towards the payment of his debts. The Court, finding that there were no assets, and holding that such income was not properly capable of being attached, and that

It had no power to order an insolvent to pay anything out of future earnings towards the discharge of his debts, declared the applicant an insolvent and granted him his discharge. Held that the Court had power to withhold the discharge until the insolvent had satisfied it, by payments on account of his debts, that he really desired to discharge his debts, and that, under the circumstances of the case, both having regard to the fact that the inquiry into the estate of the insolvent had been insufficient and to the fact that he was in a position to contribute out of his income towards the payment of his debts, the order was wrong and should be set aside. POONA LAL v. KANHAYA LALL BHAI I. L. R., 10 Cal., 780

127. Procedure in case of dishonest applicant—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 350, 359—Powers of Court.—A Court is competent to take action under s. 350 of the Civil Procedure Code at the instance of a creditor, after the hearing under s. 350 has determined. When once any of the frauds referred to in cl. (a), (b), or (c) of s. 350 have been proved at a hearing under s. 350, the Court must under s. 359 either itself pass sentence on the applicant who has committed such frauds, or must send him to a Magistrate to be dealt with according to law. The Court has no option to decline to adopt either of these courses. In acting under s. 359, the Court does not re-try the questions of fact decided by it at the hearing under s. 350, but has to proceed upon the findings come to at that hearing. An applicant for a declaration of insolvency who does not avail himself of his right of appeal from the order rejecting his application is concluded by the findings of fact at the hearing under s. 350, and cannot afterwards question them. Per STRAIGHT, J.—It is desirable that an application under s. 350 should be made immediately, or as soon as possible after the hearing under s. 350, but a delay of some months will not make the application untenable. KADIR BAKSH v. BHAWANI PRASAD [I. L. R., 14 All., 145]

128. Withdrawal of application by applicants without permission to renew—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 350, 359, and 378—Powers exercisable by Court under s. 359—Imprisonment—Payment of costs as a condition precedent to the granting of permission to withdraw.—A Court acting under s. 350 of the Code of Civil Procedure may, on the motion of a creditor under certain circumstances, order the imprisonment of an applicant for a declaration of insolvency, or it may, under certain circumstances of its own motion, send the applicant to be dealt with by a Magistrate; but it cannot, unless moved by a creditor, pass an order of imprisonment under that section; and if on the motion of a creditor it has ordered the imprisonment of the applicant, it cannot subsequently act under the last clause of s. 359. Kadir Baksh v. Bhawani Prasad I. L. R., 14 All., 145, referred to. Where, an application for a declaration of insolvency having been filed, the applicant asked and obtained permission to withdraw the application absolutely, i.e., without permission to renew the application, it was held that the Court could not make the payment by the applicant of the opposing creditor's costs a condition precedent to the granting of such permission so as to enable the Court subsequently to revive the proceedings commenced by the application, but that such proceedings were finally determined by the applicant's withdrawal. *HAIDAR SHAH v. INSOLVENT ACT (9 Geo. IV, c. 78, s. 36).

Insolvency—Mutual credit—Suit by assignees to recover surplus in Bank—Set-off of promissory notes.—P & Co., having borrowed a large sum of the Bank of Bengal, deposited Company's paper with the Bank to a greater amount as a collateral security, accompanied with a written agreement authorizing the Bank, in default of repayment of the loan by a given day, "to sell the Company's paper for the reimbursement of the Bank, rendering to Palmer & Co. any surplus." Before default was made in the repayment of the loan, P & Co. were declared insolvent under the Insolvent Act, 9 Geo. IV, c. 78, by the 36th section of which it was declared that where there had been mutual credit given by the insolvents and any other person, one debt or demand might be set off against the other; and that all such debts as might be proved under a commission of bankruptcy in England might be proved in the same manner under the Indian Insolvent Act. At the time of the adjudication of insolvency the Bank were also holders of two promissory notes of P & Co. which they had discounted for them before the transaction of the loan and the agreement as to deposit of the Company's paper. The time for repayment of the loan having expired, the Bank sold the Company's paper, the proceeds of which, after satisfying the principal and interest due on the loan, produced a considerable surplus. In an action by the assignees of P & Co. against the Bank to recover the amount of the surplus, —Held that the Bank could not set off the amount of the two promissory notes, and that the case did not come within the clause of mutual credit in the Insolvent Act. *YOUNG v. C., a European British subject residing at Karachi in Sind, failed in business in 1893, and on 11th June of that year he filed his petition in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors in Bombay. Held that, having regard to Act V of 1872, read with cl. 18 of the Letters Patent, 1865, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. By s. 5 of Stat. 11 & Vict., c. 21, the Insolvent Court was given jurisdiction over residents within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Bombay. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court extended over all inhabitants of the town and island of Bombay and over European British subjects in any of the factories subject to or dependent on the Government of Bombay. The jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court as defined by the above section remained unaffected by the establishment of the High Court in the place of the Supreme Court, except so far as it may be limited by cl. 18 of the Letters Patent, 1865. A European British subject residing within the Presidency of Bombay, though outside the town and island of Bombay, may petition the Insolvent Court of Bombay for relief. The powers and authority originally of the Supreme Court and now of the High Court given by the Insolvent Act form a branch of the jurisdiction of the High Court, and are therefore subject to any legislative restriction of that jurisdiction, whether imposed by the Letters Patent or by any subsequent enactment. The power of the High Court and any Judge of it to exercise the jurisdiction of the

—continued.

Insolvent Court, whatever the jurisdiction may be, is locally limited by cl. 18 of the Letters Patent, 1865, to the Presidency of Bombay, and cannot be exercised outside that Presidency or outside any area within it to which it may by subsequent enactment be restricted. The effect of cl. 44 of the Letters Patent, 1865, which makes the provision of cl. 18 subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council, must be that any Act of the Governor-General in Council, still further limiting the jurisdiction of the High Court and excluding it from any place even within the Presidency, must also still further narrow the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court, for otherwise the Judge of the High Court presiding as Commissioner would be exercising jurisdiction in a place where his jurisdiction under cl. 18, by virtue of which alone he could act as Commissioner, had been abolished. Act V of 1872 is such an Act. IN THE MATTER OF CURRIE

At this hearing, A, one of the insolvents, was examined. On another application for personal discharge, it appeared that, subsequent to the former order, A had left India on account of ill-health, and was therefore unable to verify the schedule. No opposition was entered, and the other insolvent, M, the partner of A, was in Court. Held it was sufficient for the schedule to be attested by M, but the Court directed that an affidavit of A should be obtained verifying the schedule, sworn before a notary public or the British Consul. Personal discharge was allowed. IN THE MATTER OF ANSTREUTHER

On the last-mentioned day the insolvent was committed to prison on a charge of murder, notwithstanding which, on the 21st March 1862, he filed his petition in the Insolvent Court. The usual order was then passed, vesting all the insolvent's estate and effects in the Official Assignee from the date of the filing of the petition. On the 28th March 1862, the present petitioner recovered judgment in his action in the Supreme Court. The insolvent was tried and convicted and sentenced to death, and on the 14th of April 1862, before the insolvent filed his schedule in the Insolvent Court, the sentence was carried into execution. Held, first, that s. 6 of 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, is not imperative; and, secondly, that ss. 21 and 26 of the same Act give the Official Assignee ample powers for the ascertainment

7. ———— Personal estate of the insolvent—Expectant or contingent interest—Employed—Deduction from salary for a provident fund and mutual assurance fund—Right of Official Assignee.—S, a clerk in the employment of the G. I. P. Railway Company, agreed with the Company that 5 per cent. of his salary should be deducted every month as his contribution or subscription to a fund called the Provident Fund, and further rate of 1 per cent. as his subscription to another fund called the Mutual Assurance Fund. By the rules of those funds he was entitled to receive back his subscriptions in the event of his dismissal for misconduct. S became insolvent, and omitted to mention in his schedule the sums standing to his credit in respect of the above two funds. Held that these sums were personal estate of the insolvent held by the company in trust for him, which passed to the Official Assignee under s. 7 of Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, and that they should be entered in his schedule as part of his estate. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SHERWABURY

The death of the insolvent has no effect on the proceedings in his insolvency or on the power of the Official Assignee. The ancestral estate previously vested in the Official Assignee is not thereby divested from him and vested in the son by right of survivorship. In the legal aspect of the matter, the natural existence of the insolvent is, for the purpose of dealing with his estate, artificially continued in the Official Assignee, who can, after the insolvent's death, deal with the estate as he could have dealt with it had the insolvent been still alive. *FARID-CHAND MOTICHAND v. The mere fact that a payment was made to a person at a time when his petition was upon the file of the Insolvent Court, which petition was afterwards dismissed, does not invalidate the payment. *RAJKRISTO SINGH v. 10. ———— Discharge—Dismissal of petition—Power to set aside order of dismissal when fraud is shown.—When an insolvent has obtained his discharge, a Commissioner has no jurisdiction, on the application of some of the creditors, to make an order dismissing his petition, and ordering the estate and effects of the insolvent in the hands of the Official Assignee to be made over to certain persons on behalf of the creditors. The petition being dismissed, the property re-vested in the insolvents. One of the decree-holders had already attached property of the insolvent and had obtained an order for sale in a District Court, and now another decree-holder applied to the same Court in execution of his decrees for the attachment of other property and for rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale to be held in execution of the attachment already made. The District Judge held that the vesting order was a bar to both of these applications. Held (1) that the order rejecting the application for fresh attachment was right; (2) that the order rejecting the application for rateable distribution was wrong, and that the High Court had power to set it aside on revision under Civil Procedure Code, s. 622. *VISARAGHAYA v. 15. ————— Insolvency of managing member of a Hindu family—Effect of vesting order—Official Assignee's power to convey land.—The managing member of a Hindu family was adjudicated an insolvent, and a vesting order was made. The Official Assignee conveyed a house forming part of the family property of the insolvent to the plaintiff, who now sued for possession. The second defendant was the younger brother of the insolvent; the other defendants were the insolvent's sons. Held the effect of the vesting order was to entitle the Official Assignee to the shares of the co-parceners as well as that of the insolvent—Fakerehand Motichand v. Motichand Harrook Chand, I. L. R., 7 Bom., 438—and he was entitled to transfer such shares, provided the debts for payment of which the property is disposed of were shown to have been incurred for purposes binding on such shares. The plaintiff did not prove that the debts which led to the adjudication were incurred for the necessary purposes of the family, and the insolvent's sons did not prove that they were incurred for immoral purposes. Held therefore that the Official Assignee could only convey the shares of the sons of the insolvent, and accordingly that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety of the house only, and that the house should be sold and half the sale-proceeds paid to him. *RANGAYYA CHETTI v. leaving his widow as his heir. His brother B was next reversionary heir after M's widow, and in 1880 he (B) became insolvent, and his estate vested in the Official Assignee, who sold to the plaintiff his interest in certain mortgaged property which had belonged to M and was then in the possession of M's widow as his heir. M's widow died in 1886, and after her death the plaintiff sued to redeem the property from the mortgage. Held that at the date of his insolvency, M's widow being then alive, the interest of B as reversionary heir in the said property was only a spes successionis, which could not vest in the Official Assignee. The plaintiff therefore took no interest in the property by his purchase from the Official Assignee. ANANT v. BATHOJI KRISHNARAY (I. L. R., 21 Bom., 310

Part of his property was subsequently attached in execution of a decree. Afterwards, his petition in insolvency was dismissed and the vesting order discharged. On the same date a creditor's trust-deed was executed, of which the plaintiffs were the trustees. They now sued to set aside the proceedings in execution and to cancel the sale of the property which had been sold in execution after the date of the trust-deed. Held that the suit was not maintainable. *RAMASANI KOTTADIAH v. It may be prevented by the creditor at any time subsequently to the imprisonment. The effect of the words "It shall be lawful" in s. 9 of the Insolvent Act are imperative, and do not give the Court a discretion in the exercise of which it may refuse an order of adjudication applied for under that section. D having gone away on pilgrimage, the Calcutta business became involved, and on the 6th February 1893 P stopped payment and retired to the third storey, but was accessible to all creditors either in the office where business was usually carried on or in the private room on the third storey. creditors. Held that such stoppage of payment was not an act of insolvency within the meaning of the Insolvent Act, and that the retirement of P to his rooms on the third storey was not a departure with the intention to defeat and delay the creditors of D. Held further that a departure such as is made an act of insolvency by s. 9 of the Act is a departure by the debtor personally, and cannot be committed by any other person on his behalf. Such departure must be his departure, and the intent to depart must be proved to be his intent. Moreover, a man cannot commit an act of insolvency by an act of his agent which he has not authorized, and of which act he had no cognizance. In re Huruck Chand Golicha, 1 L. [1 L. R., 20 Cal., 771]

Held in the same case on appeal to the Privy Council a principal employing a gomastah to carry on a trade within the local limits of the High Court's jurisdiction may in some cases be adjudged to have committed an act of insolvency within the meaning of s. 9 of the Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, in consequence of the gomastah's act without the principal's having specially authorized it or having had cognizance of it; and this might be applied upon a gomastah's having departed from the usual place of business with intent to defeat or delay the firm's creditors. Not every gomastah stands in this respect in the same relation to his employer, there being a difference in the degree of control exercised by different owners. The gomastah may be only an ordinary manager or he may represent the firm entirely. It is a question of fact in each case whether the gomastah occupies such a position that the principal stands or falls by his acts, and whether the gomastah's departure from the place of business, with the above intent, shall or shall not be, by imputation, the act of the principal, bringing s. 9 into operation against the latter. Here a munib gomastah in charge of the business was alleged to have so departed; but the owner of it, though at the time absent, was usually active and responsible in it. The firm's payments had been suspended by the gomastah. But under the Indian Statute, that is not an act of insolvency. The gomastah had withdrawn to his own apartment in the house occupied by the firm, but how this would defeat or delay creditors, some of whom visited him there, was not shown. Other acts before the arrival of the principal were done, but none amounted to departure with intent or to departure at all. Held that the gomastah, even if he had departed from the place of business with the intent to defeat or delay creditors, was not in such a position as that he had authority rendering his principal liable to be adjudged insolvent. The principle in the decision of In re Huruck Chand Golicha, 1 L. R., 5 Cal., 605, which was that the act of a gomastah, his authority flowing from his general position, may, in some cases, be taken as the act of his principal rendering him liable within the statute, was correct. himself and two nephews carrying on a family business in Bombay, Madras, and other places. In a suit brought in the High Court of Bombay, against him as manager of the said joint family, a decree was passed on the 11th April 1896, which was in terms against the defendant alone. On the same day certain property in Bombay, in which (as found by the Judge) the nephews and the defendant were jointly interested, was attached in execution of the decree. Two days previously, however, viz., on the 9th April 1896, the defendant had been adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvent Court at Madras under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21). On the 6th May 1896, the Official Assignee took out a summons to have the attachment removed. It was contended that the creditor's petition in the Madras Insolvent Court disclosed no act of insolvency which could legally justify an adjudication under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), and that the adjudication order was therefore made by a Court not competent to make it within the meaning of s. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), and that consequently both it and the vesting order were nullities, and the Official Assignee of Madras had no title to the attached property. Held that the order, although it might be erroneous and subject to reversal on appeal, was within the competency of the Madras Insolvent Court. Held also on the evidence that there was no proof of such collusion between the creditor and the insolvent in obtaining the order of adjudication as would bring that order within s. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). SARDARMAL JAGONATH v. 8. ————— Adjudication of insolvency—Concurrent proceedings in two Insolvent Courts in India—High Court, Jurisdiction of—Discretion of Court to which second application for adjudication order is made—Act of insolvency—Departure from jurisdiction with intent to delay creditors—Stay of proceedings.—On the 23rd April 1896, A was adjudged insolvent under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21) by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Bombay at the instance of certain creditors resident in Bombay. He subsequently took out a rule to annul the order of adjudication on the ground that at the date of the said order he had already (viz., on the 9th April 1896) been adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvency Court at Madras. Held, discharging the rule, that the prior adjudication of the Madras Court did not deprive the Court at Bombay of jurisdiction to adjudicate him an insolvent at the instance of a Bombay creditor. The latter Court, however, was not bound under s. 9 to make such order, but had a discretion to refuse it if, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, it considered that adjudication in Bombay would be useless. Subsequently to the order of adjudication in Bombay, and while it was still in force, the insolvent obtained his personal discharge in the Insolvent Court at Madras under s. 40 of the Indian Insolvent Act. Held that there being no longer any ground for apprehending that the proceedings in the Madras

Court would be discontinued, the proceedings in the Court at Bombay should be stayed, leaving the Bombay creditors to take such steps in Madras as they might think proper. It would not be just or equitable to allow the proceedings in both Courts to go on concurrently. As the proceedings in Madras were prior in time, and all the assets of the insolvent were vested in the Official Assignee there, the Court at Bombay ought to yield to the prior claim of the Court at Madras. A, a debtor in Bombay, summoned his creditors to a meeting fixed for the 28th March 1896. He attended that meeting, which was adjourned to the 30th March, and at the adjourned meeting he submitted a statement showing that he had a sum of R 11,000 in cash in his hands. Two of his creditors asked him to give inspection of his Bombay books of accounts, but he refused to do so. A further meeting was summoned for the 8th April. On the 31st March or 1st April two of his Bombay creditors served him with a summons in an action of debt. On the 2nd April he left Bombay for Bellary taking the said sum of R 11,000 with him, in order (as he admitted) to prevent the said two creditors from attaching it. The creditors attended the meeting of the 18th April, but it was dissolved when it was discovered that A had left Bombay. The books were not produced. Held that under these circumstances the Court was justified in concluding that A had left the jurisdiction of the Court with intent to defeat and delay his creditors within the meaning of s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act. IN RE ARANYAYAL SANNAPATHY. s. 30—Bankruptcy Rules of 1848, Rule XXV—"Person interested"—Liability for costs of unsuccessful motion—Deponent of an affidavit.—A sale of property forming portion of the estate of certain insolvent debtors having been authorised by the Court, the Official Assignee moved to set it aside, relying in support of his application on affidavits which had been filed in Court and in which the deponents alleged that the property was worth a great deal more than the price at which the sale had been authorised. The Court having dismissed the motion, and ordered the deponents to pay the costs of the Official Assignee and the purchasers, Held that the deponents could not be made liable for costs, and that Rule XXV of the Bankruptcy Rules of December 1848 did not apply to such a case. The deponents were not "persons interested in the insolvent's estate," nor could they be said to have "applied" or appeared on an application. The Official Assignee should be made liable for the costs of such an unsuccessful application, he being left to take such steps as might be necessary to indemnify himself. RAMANNA NAIDU v. 10. ———— Order to examine witnesses under s. 36—Discovery of insolvent's property—Bond fide creditor—Practice—Conduct of examination.—When the Official Assignee makes or supports an application to examine witnesses under s. 36 of the Indian Insolvent Act, such application should be readily granted. When it is made by any other person, the grounds of the application should be carefully sifted, and the Court should satisfy itself that the inquiry will probably lead to some benefit to the creditors or estate, and is not merely made to harass and annoy the persons proposed to be examined. A became insolvent in 1866 and fled out of the jurisdiction. In August 1868, a person, alleging himself to be a creditor of the insolvent's estate, obtained an order under s. 36 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), directing the examination of the insolvent's son and daughter, R and L, with a view to the discovery of certain property of the insolvent which might be made available for the creditors. R and L subsequently obtained a rule nisi to set aside the order. They filed affidavits alleging that the applicant was not a bond fide creditor to the estate; that although he had, no doubt, bought a claim upon the estate in his own name, he was merely a nominee of his brother A who had supplied the purchase-money; and they alleged that his application was the result of a family quarrel, and was made merely from motives of ill-will. The Court held that the applicant was not a bond fide creditor of the estate.

The order for examination was, however, supported by the Chartered Mercantile Bank, which was admittedly a bond fide creditor. Held that the applicant not being a creditor, and the Official Assignee not supporting the application, and the affidavits showing feeling and the bias, the Court would have hesitated to admit the application for the order, under s. 36, if it stood alone. But the fact that the Chartered Mercantile Bank, an admittedly bond fide creditor, supported the application, altered the case, and the examination applied for ought to be allowed. Under the circumstances, however, the Court was of opinion that the applicant, who belonged to the insolvent's family, and was involved in a bitter family quarrel, should not conduct the examination, and ordered that the Chartered Mercantile Bank should apply to the Official Assignee to conduct the inquiry, and if he declined to do so, the Bank should do it. *IN RE ALLADINBHAY HUBIBHOY. On the 28th July 1897, the plaintiff B was adjudicated an insolvent. On the 4th October 1897, one H, a creditor of the insolvent, obtained an order from the Insolvent Court under s. 36 of the Insolvent Act for the examination of C, D, and I with reference to the estate and effects of the said insolvent, and the 10th November 1897 was appointed for their examination. On the said 10th November, they obtained a rule from the Insolvent Court to set aside the said order for their examination, or in the alternative to postpone their examination until after the above suit, in which they were defendants, should be heard. The rule was subsequently discharged and the examination was ordered to proceed. On appeal, —Held that C and D ought not to be prejudiced in their defence in the suit brought against them by the insolvent by being subjected to an examination until that case was heard. By filing their written statements and giving inspection of documents, they had given all the information they could be required to give until the hearing should take place. As to I, however, the order for examination was confirmed, he not having filed any defence in the civil suit nor given inspection. IN RE BHAGWANDAS NAROTAMDAS

1. ——— s. 40—Assignment to trustees for benefit of creditors—Notice to creditors to register claims—Refusal of trustees to register claim preferred after time—Cause of action.—The creditor of an insolvent, who had assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of all his creditors generally, sued him for his debt, joining the trustees as defendants on the ground that they had refused to register his claim. The trustees had refused to register the claim on the ground that the plaintiff had not applied for its registration within the time notified by them, and that he would not consent to abide by the order which the High Court might make on an application by the trustees for its advice regarding the claims of creditors who, like the plaintiff, had applied for the registration of their claims after such time, but before the assets of the insolvent had been distributed. The deed of trust empowered the trustees to distribute the assets of the insolvent after a certain time among the creditors who had preferred their claims within that time, and declared that they should not be liable for such distribution to creditors who had not preferred their claims within that time; but it did not empower them to refuse to register claims made after that time, but before distribution of the assets. Held that the refusal of the trustees to register the plaintiff's claim gave him a cause of action against them; and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had applied for the registration of his claim before the distribution of the assets, the trustees had improperly refused to register it. AJUDHIA NATH v. It appears that the so-called commission was in the nature of interest, and was fixed at a high rate, because the debtor was expected to obtain the lease of a forest and to derive large profits therefrom. firm of C N & Co., also of Calcutta, to indent for them for iron from England. In pursuance of such authority, C N & Co. ordered, through their London agents, P P & Co., a shipment of iron, which was duly shipped by P P & Co., who drew against the said shipment two bills of exchange for Rs 10,000 and Rs 1,484-10, respectively, on the firm of S M & Co., in favour of C N & Co. The bills, on presentation, were duly accepted by S M & Co., and afterwards discounted by C N & Co. with the Chartered Mercantile Bank, C N & Co. at the same time depositing with the Bank, as collateral security for the payment of the bills, the bill of lading for the iron shipped from England by P P & Co. Subsequently both S M & Co. and C N & Co. filed their petitions in the Insolvent Court, and were adjudicated insolvents. In the schedule of S M & Co. the Bank was inserted as a creditor in respect of this transaction for Rs 11,484-10. When the bills of exchange became due, they were duly presented for payment to the acceptors, but were dishonoured and protested by the Bank for non-payment, and on such non-payment the Bank sold the shipment of iron for which it held the bills of lading, and realized the sum of Rs 10,073-12-6. The Bank claimed to prove for the whole amount in the schedule against the estate of S M & Co. Held that the Bank was only entitled to prove for so much as was due to it on the bills of exchange after deducting the amount realized by the sale of the iron. In the circumstances of the case, C N & Co. were interested in the shipment of iron as well as S M & Co., and therefore there was no obligation on the Bank to give up the security before proving its claim, but it might have proved for the whole amount of the debt and retained the security. IN THE MATTER OF SHIB CHANDRA MULLICK

B became insolvent in July 1882. No demand was made. On the 6th January 1877 a balance of £27,562 remained due, which, with interest up to July 1882, was increased to £42,564. The liquidators of S & Co., who had in the meantime dissolved partnership, sought to prove against B's estate for £30,564 after deducting the £12,000 advanced to A. Held that the liquidators (if entitled to prove at all) could only prove for the difference between the sum of £30,564 and the value of the mortgage security after realizing or giving credit for the value of the first security. IN THE MATTER OF AGARRO

After their discharge, a creditor, to whom they had mortgaged certain property, made an application for the sale of the mortgaged properties, and the petitioner prayed for an order for an account of what was due on the mortgage, and for a sale under the conduct of the Official Assignee; that he should be at liberty to bid and set off the amount of the purchase against the sum due to him; that if any other person became the purchaser, the proceeds should be paid to him in liquidation of his debt, and that, after crediting that amount, the applicant might rank as a creditor to the estate for any remaining balance. Claims, therefore, by servants of an insolvent firm only allowed up to date of insolvency, not to the end of the month. Claim of servant who had left insolvent's service before date of insolvency allowed, but only for so much as accrued due to him within the six months previous to insolvency. Sum agreed to be paid to an assistant as extra salary or remuneration for making up insolvent's statement to be laid before the creditors, disallowed. Costs of the applications allowed out of the estate. One claimant was manager of the insolvent's business at Simla on a salary of £350 per month, up to 11th April 1867, when one of the partners wrote to him, promising him commission to make his salary up to £500. 12. ———— a. 44—Omission to claim dividend—Expunging names of creditors from schedule—Official Assignee a trustee for creditors admitted in schedule.—The applicant was a creditor of the insolvents, who filed their schedule in Bombay in July 1868. The schedule contained the names of twenty-six creditors, twenty of whom were residents in Karachi and six in Multan. The debts amounted, in the aggregate, to £51,819-13, and were all admitted, some of them being for trifling sums. The applicant was the largest creditor on the schedule, his debt amounting to £27,500. The insolvents obtained their personal discharge in March 1869. Since the date of the insolvency, one dividend had been declared, viz., a dividend of one per cent. in 1870. Only one creditor had applied for and received that dividend. On the 5th July 1886, the applicant for the first time applied for a dividend on his claim. He was then, after so long a time, unable to adduce any proof in his own possession in support of his claim, but was ultimately allowed by the Official Assignee to prove his claim from the insolvent's books. Having thus proved his claim against the estate, the applicant obtained a rule on the 5th October 1887, calling on the other creditors of the insolvents to show cause why they should not come in and prove their claims, or, in default, why their names should not be expunged from their insolvent's schedule. Held, discharging the rule, that the Court had no power to expunge the name of a

5. ——— and s. 51—Conduct of insolvent amounting to offences within ss. 50, 51—Conduct of insolvent considered with reference to the following charges filed against him by opposing creditors, viz., reckless speculation; contracting debts without reasonable expectation of paying them; misconduct in contracting debts; concealment of property; obtaining forbearance by false representations; contracting debts by false pretences; undue preference.—The insolvent had for many years carried on business in Bombay as a merchant. His firm (Messrs. B. and A. Hormarji) had been established in 1830 by his uncle and father. On the death of the latter in 1882, the insolvent was left the sole surviving partner, and from that time until his failure he carried on the business alone. The failure took place in April 1891, and on the 1st May 1891 he was adjudicated an insolvent. His liabilities were stated to be Rs. 47,98,591; his good assets Rs. 5,13,903, and his doubtful assets Rs. 60,014. His discharge was opposed by six Banks in Bombay with which he had had dealings. The grounds of opposition were as follows:—(1) Reckless speculation; (2) contracting debts without any reasonable expectation, at the time when the same were contracted, of paying the same; (3) gross misconduct in contracting debts; (4) concealment of property; (5) obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them; (6) contracting debts by means of false pretences; (7) fraudulently and with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors or of giving an undue preference to creditors, having discharged a debt due by the insolvent. It appeared that down to the end of 1889 there was nothing in the dealings of the firm to which objection could be taken. In the first half of the year 1890 the insolvent must have sustained heavy loss, as his mercantile assets over liabilities, which on the 31st December 1889 were Rs. 50,794, were on the 30th June 1890 reduced to Rs. 29,612. The charges, however, against the insolvent were based upon his conduct subsequently to the latter date. On that day (30th June 1890) the insolvent nominally possessed four lakhs of rupees, the saleable value of which was about 2½ lakhs. With his finances in this state the insolvent speculated in exchange, and in six months (viz., before the 31st December 1890) he had lost his four lakhs of nominal capital, and 10 or 23 lakhs of rupees besides. The Court held (1) as to the first ground of opposition that the insolvent was guilty of rash and reckless speculation. This, however, was not an offence within the meaning of s. 51 of the Indian Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21). When the insolvent entered into the contracts which had resulted in the loss, he had a fair capital, and though his speculations were excessive in amount, he had a fairly reasonable expectation that there would not be such a fall in exchange as would more than absorb his assets. (2) As to the second and third grounds of opposition, that they were proved in respect of the insolvent's transactions subsequently to December 1890, and that the insolvent was guilty of gross misconduct in contracting debts, having no reasonable or probable expectation, at the time when they were contracted, of paying them, and that his conduct fell within the purview of s. 51 of the Insolvent Act. In December 1890 the insolvent was bankrupt to the extent (at all events) of over 16 lakhs, and had on hand large forward contracts which then showed a further probable loss. In that position he entered into further large speculative sales of exchange. He had then no assets with which to meet any loss. (3) As to the fourth ground of opposition, that it was proved. (4) As to the fifth ground of opposition, that it was not established. On the 18th April 1891 the insolvent called a meeting of creditors and laid a not very candid or truthful statement of his affairs before them. Nothing was then arranged, and the meeting was adjourned for a week, in order that a committee should examine the insolvent's position, etc. It was understood and arranged that in the meantime no steps should be taken against the insolvent, and that he should keep his affairs in status quo. The insolvent, however, swore that he understood he was to make no large payments, but that he was to keep the firm going. During that week the insolvent paid Rs. 1,193 due on a bill to one of the Banks and Rs. 172 on re-draft account, a few insignificant current expenses and Rs. 1,000 to his solicitors, who were preparing a trust-deed to be carried before the creditors. The Court was of opinion that the conduct of the insolvent in making these payments did not amount to the offence charged in the fifth ground of opposition, viz., obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them. (5) As to the sixth ground, that it was not established. On the 14th March the insolvent, in answer to enquiries, had assured the manager of the Chartered Bank that his firm was quite sound and solvent, it being then to his knowledge hopelessly insolvent. On that day the manager accepted the insolvent's bills for £20,000 for which security was given, and subsequently the insolvent sold one of his own bills for £10,000 to the Bank. This, however, was in pursuance of a previous contract. The evidence of the manager showed that it was because of this contract, and not because of the false representation of the insolvent, that he purchased the draft for £10,000. The Court was of opinion that the transaction did not come within s. 50. (6) As to the seventh ground (undue preference), that it was not proved. On the 16th April 1891, the day but one before the insolvent held a meeting of his creditors, he sent Rs. 5,000 to Messrs. Elliott & Sons in England. That firm had accepted bills of the insolvent which he was bound to take up, but the earliest did not fall due until the 20th May 1891. His practice had been to remit money a day or two before bills became due. The Court was of opinion that the transaction was not an undue preference within s. 50. It was, no doubt, a voluntary payment, but it was not shown to be a fraudulent discharge of a debt within the section. A mere voluntary payment of a debt is not within the purview of the section. Such a payment, must be fraudulent and must be made with the intent of diminishing the sum to be divided amongst creditors, or of giving an undue preference to any of the creditors. From the mere fact of a voluntary payment, fraud of a penal nature cannot be inferred. Here nothing more was proved than a voluntary payment by a man in insolvent circumstances. The insolvent knew he was in difficulties, but was of so sanguine a nature that he believed he could surmount them, and so Rs. 5,000 were sent rather with a view to keep up his English connection than with the fraudulent intent of giving an undue preference. Where an undue preference is made penal, the Court must be satisfied that the guilty intention necessary to constitute the offence existed in the mind of the insolvent, and ought not to assume it unless the circumstances point to no other probable conclusion. The release by an insolvent of a debt due to him without receiving payment would undoubtedly fall within the scope of s. 50 of the Insolvent Act. IN THE MATTER OF HORMARJI ARDESHIR HORMARJI . . . No decree had been obtained by the creditor on his mortgage. The opposing creditor applied that the insolvent be dealt with under s. 51 of the Insolvent Act. The insolvent contended that an order under s. 51 could only be made when the creditor had obtained a decree, and was in a position to apply at once for the arrest of the insolvent, which was not the case here.

When he had completed the term of his imprisonment, he left Bombay, and went to Morar and ultimately settled at Aligarh in the North-West Provinces. In August 1886, the Official Assignee was informed that the insolvent was possessed of landed property at Aligarh, and also considerable moveable property. On the 25th August 1886, the Official Assignee obtained a rule nisi calling on the insolvent to show cause why he should not hand over all this property to the Official Assignee for the payment of creditors. On the 10th August 1887, an order was made by the Insolvent Court under s. 58 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21) directing the insolvent to appear before the Court on the 31st September 1887, to be examined touching his estate and effects and dealings and transactions. s. 59 and s. 7—Order of discharge, Effect of—Interest received after order of discharge by Official Assignee.—Under a vesting order, an insolvent's estate became vested in the Official Assignee, who paid the scheduled creditors the principal of their debts. He subsequently received the interest on certain securities which had been bequeathed to the insolvent for his life before the date of the vesting order. Held that the discharging order did not make the vesting order void, nor as regarded the estate vested in the Official Assignee did it revert immediately the right of property in the insolvent; that creditors are entitled to interest carrying debts out of a surplus remaining in the Official Assignee's hands after payment of the scheduled amount of debts; that, notwithstanding the discharging order, the Court might direct the R143-1-8, and the interest subsequently received, to be paid to the insolvent's creditors rateably in respect of interest on their debts calculated down to the date of the discharging order, and that the balance should be paid to the insolvent or his representative; that the interest subsequently received by the Official Assignee was "neither after-acquired property" within the meaning of s. 59 nor "a debt growing due to the insolvent before the Court shall have made its order" within the meaning of s. 7 of 11 Vict., c. 21. IN THE MATTER OF PEREIRA

The balance order recited that it was made upon the application of the official liquidator of the Bank, and that there had been no appearance on behalf of the contributories. The defendant pleaded that he had not received notice that his name was about to be placed on the list of contributories, or notice of the application of the official liquidator recited in the balance order, and he contended that he was not bound by, or liable under, that order. He further pleaded (and it was admitted) that the order for winding up the plaintiffs' Bank was in July 1866, that he had filed his petition in insolvency on 19th November 1866, and had obtained his discharge under s. 60 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21) on the 30th September 1867; and he contended that by that order he was discharged from liability. Held, upon the evidence, that service upon the defendant of the various notices was sufficiently proved. Held also that, although the defendant's insolvency and his discharge under s. 60 of the Insolvent Act, which was subsequent to the order for the winding up of the Bank, might have absolved him from further liability to the plaintiffs, and, if pleaded in the Court in England, might have prevented his being placed on the list of contributories, yet that the Court could not, in this suit, give effect to the defendant's discharge. The order made on the hearing of the petition under s. 47 of the Act can be used as evidence against the insolvent when applying for his discharge under s. 60, provided that such order clearly states the offences established against the insolvent. An insolvent, by being punished under s. 60 of the Act, does not thereby cease to be liable in respect of such offences when he applies for his discharge under the 60th section. In December 1894, on his application for final discharge under s. 60 of the Act, the Official Assignee applied that, before the order of discharge was made, judgment should be entered up against him under s. 86 for the amount of his debts. The Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, in the exercise of the discretion given to him by the Act, ordered judgment to be entered up accordingly. 3. ——— Production of documents—Discovery—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 181, 186.—If a notice under s. 181 of the Civil Procedure Code be not answered as provided by s. 182, the party seeking the inspection of documents may apply for an order under s. 183, and his application must be supported by an affidavit. The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order under s. 186, unless the provisions of s. 184 are strictly complied with. DHAPI v. RAM PERSHAD. I. L. R., 14 Cal., 768

4. ——— Discovery—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 129, 186.—Discovery of documents—Pardanashin women.—In a suit brought by two Mahomedan pardanashin ladies for recovery of immoveable property by right of inheritance, an order was passed, under s. 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, requiring the plaintiffs to declare by affidavit "all the papers connected with the points at issue in the case which were or had been in their possession or control." After some ineffectual proceedings, the plaintiffs were peremptorily ordered to file their affidavit on a certain date. On that date an affidavit was filed on their behalf by their brother and mook-tear, with a list of their documentary evidence, but the affidavit and list were considered defective upon several grounds, one of which was that the affidavit ought to have been made by the plaintiffs personally. Further time was then given to the plaintiffs to amend these defects, and ultimately they filed an affidavit purporting to be made by them personally, praying that the Court would have it verified in any manner thought proper, provided that their pardanashini were not interfered with. The Court, under s. 186 of the Code, dismissed the suit for want of prosecution, in consequence of the orders under s. 129 not having been complied with, though ample opportunity had been given to the plaintiffs, and no sufficient ground for non-compliance had been shown. Held, without going into the question of the sufficiency or non-sufficiency of the action of the plaintiffs, with regard to the orders made under s. 129 of the Code, that, looking at the disabilities of the plaintiff and the circumstances of their suit, the case was not one in which it was expedient to enforce the liability to which they might have exposed themselves under the peculiar provisions of s. 186. *KALIAN BIBI v. 5. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 135—Trial of issue before inspection granted.—The intention of s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) is to give the Court the power of raising and determining an issue for the exclusive purpose of deciding the right to discovery of evidence which is to be used at the trial, and therefore, from the nature of the case, before the hearing of the cause. It should be a rule of practice that when an order is made under s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) by the Judge in chambers, the suit should be set down for the trial of the particular issue as well as of the cause itself when it comes to a hearing before the same Judge. *AMRDEBHOY HUBBHOY v. 6. ——— Inspection of accounts—Suit for wrongful dismissal.—In a suit for wrongful dismissal of a servant of a gas company, in which the plaintiff alleged that the motive for dismissing him was his discovery of certain irregularities of the manager with regard to money-matters.—Held that he was entitled to inspect the accounts which had been checked by himself while in the company's service, the press-copy letter-book containing copies of correspondence regarding his own conduct while in the company's service, and the account of a particular item in respect of which he alleged he had made discoveries that he imputed to the manager as the cause of his dismissal. *MITCHELL v. B subsequently became embarrassed and assigned all his immoveable estate to trustees for his creditors. The trustees sued J D for a declaration that the immoveable property other than the mortgaged premises was vested in them free from any lien of the defendant; and J D in his written statement claimed a lien on all the title-deeds, and submitted that he was not bound (until his claim was satisfied) to hand them over to the plaintiffs, or to produce them or his deed of mortgage for inspection. Semble—That on the authorities J D was not bound to produce the title-deeds before satisfaction of his claim. Quare—Whether before satisfaction he was bound over to produce his deed of mortgage. *BRATTEE v. 13. ——— Documents alleged not to be material—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1889), s. 185—Affidavit of documents—Production of documents—Specific performance of contract to purchase—Refusal to allow inspection.—In a suit for specific performance of a contract to purchase an indigo factory, the defendant denied that the agreement relied on was final, and alleged that the plaintiff had induced him to sign the agreement by means of representations regarding the nature, the extent, the value, and the net income of the property, all of which representations the defendant charged were false and fraudulent to the knowledge of the plaintiff. The plaintiff in his affidavit of documents set out a list of title-deeds evidencing his title to and the books of accounts and other papers and documents relating to the property agreed to be purchased, and these he claimed to withhold from the defendant's inspection, on the ground that they were not sufficiently material at that stage of the suit. Held that the documents were not protected. *SUTHERLAND v. 18. ——— Discovery—Affidavit of documents when there are several plaintiffs, some of whom are in England—Practice—Privilege—Grounds of privilege.—Where there are several plaintiffs, all of them must join in making the affidavit of documents, unless some specific reasons to the contrary are shown. The fact that some of the plaintiffs reside in England is no reason why they should be excused from making such affidavit. Documents which contain the purport of interviews with, and of advice received from, the plaintiffs' solicitors and counsel as to the plaintiffs' position in regard to their said claim and as to the steps to be taken thereto, are privileged. Documents which record the steps taken by the plaintiffs from time to time in prosecuting their claim against the defendant are not privileged. Opinions upon, or steps taken in reference to, a suit in which plaintiffs and defendants are putting forward opposing contentions cannot be said to relate solely to the case of the plaintiff, and are not privileged. KYRIS v. 19. ——— Co-defendants—

Inspection granted to defendant against co-defendant.—A defendant may obtain discovery or inspection as against a co-defendant if the latter can be regarded as an opposite party. The plaintiff sued to set aside a mortgage made by his uncle (defendant No. 3) to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, alleging that, shortly after he (the plaintiff) had attained his majority, he had been induced to join in the mortgage by the undue influence and threats of his uncle (defendant No. 3), who represented that the money to be raised by the mortgage was required to pay off the debts of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff further alleged that he had received none of the money, and that no money had been paid by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the third defendant in his presence. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took out a summons against the third defendant for inspection of certain account books and documents. It was objected that no question was raised in the suit between the third defendant and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and that consequently, under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the latter were not entitled to inspection. Held that inspection must be given. It was possible that, not being able to set aside the mortgage as

20. ——— Affidavit of documents, Sufficiency of—Practice—Right to put in further affidavit in support of claim of privilege where original affidavit is not sufficient—Documents referred to in pleadings as stating facts on which party setting them up relies.—Where an affidavit of documents stated, with regard to certain documents of which the plaintiffs asked for inspection, that the defendants objected to produce them for inspection "because such documents were obtained after dispute arose, and for purposes of litigation that might arise between them and the plaintiffs,"—Held, in an application for their production and inspection, that the affidavit was not sufficient to support the defendant's claim to privilege. Held also in such an application the party claiming privilege is entitled to put in and use a further affidavit in support of the claim of privilege, and is not confined to the grounds made in the affidavit in which the claim is first set up. M'Corquodale v. Bell, L. R., 1 C. P. D., 471, referred to. Where, however, the party comes into Court relying on the original affidavit as sufficient to support his claim of privilege, but asks the Court, if it should think otherwise, for leave to put in a further affidavit in support of his claim, quære whether he should be allowed to do so. In a suit brought in January 1881 to recover money for work done and materials supplied in the erection of certain mills for the defendants, in which the defence was that the quality of the work was inferior to that contracted for, and the defendants stated in their written statement that, "in consequence of the information which they had received with regard to the quality of the work done by the plaintiffs, they caused the same to be inspected by two independent engineers in the month of July 1893, and they at once discovered such extensive defects therein that the costs of making good such defects will far exceed any possible sum due to the plaintiffs,"—Held that the defendants could not set up a claim of privilege for the reports of the two engineers. Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia, L. R., 2 C. D., 644, referred to. Where a party expressly refers to documents in the pleadings as the source of his own information and knowledge of facts relevant to the suit and then sets up those facts by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim, he cannot afterwards attempt to make the case that the documents are confidential, and intended merely for his legal advisers, or for the purpose only of evidence in the case. UMSICA CHURN SEN v. Code of Civil Procedure, to give discovery by affidavit and inspection of documents in his possession relating to the suit. 23. ———— Documents of title, Refusal to produce—Suit for ejectment.—The plaintiff sued to eject the defendant from certain pieces of land belonging to him, being portions of a passage upon which the defendant had encroached. In his written statement the defendant denied the plaintiff's title, and stated that he would rely on certain deeds set forth in a schedule annexed thereto. In his affidavit of documents subsequently filed he objected to produce the deeds for the plaintiff's inspection on the ground that they related solely to his own title to the land in dispute, and did not in any way tend to prove or support the title of the plaintiff thereto. Held that the defendant was entitled to refuse production of the deeds. The Court could not go behind the defendant's affidavit of documents. VINAYAKRAO DHUNDIRAJ v. NAROTAM ANANDJI

24. ———— Place for inspection—Account books of business—Place where business is carried on—Contract made in Bombay to be performed up-country—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 132.—Defendant was owner of certain cotton-ginning factories at and near A in the mofussil, and had also a place of business in Bombay. He entered into a contract in Bombay with the plaintiff to gin certain cotton of the plaintiff's at the said factories of the defendant in the mofussil. Plaintiff brought a suit for damages for the breach of this contract, and demanded inspection in Bombay of all defendant's books relating to the business of the said ginning factories belonging to the defendant. The defendant was willing to give the inspection asked for, but contended that it should be had at A, where all the books in question were kept, and objected to bringing the books down to Bombay as demanded by the plaintiff. Held that the contract, though made in Bombay, having been intended to be performed at a considerable distance from Bombay, at and near A, where the business of ginning was conducted, and where the books relating to the said business were kept, A was the

26. ———— Inspection by agent of a party.—When under an order giving liberty to a party to a suit, his attorneys and agents, to inspect and peruse the documents produced by the opposite party, inspection by an agent is contemplated, the order should be read in such a way as would give the Court some control over the persons to be appointed to inspect the documents. Such an order contemplates that the agent will be a person standing in the position of the party for the purposes of the suit. Held therefore that the Court ought not to permit a person formerly in the service of the defendant to inspect as the plaintiff's agent the defendant's books which had been in his charge. *ENAMUL HUQ v. 2. CRIMINAL CASES.

27. ———— Discovery—Power of Court to order inspection—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 94-99—Search-warrant, Form and validity of.—A and T, the latter of whom was the book-keeper in the firm of J M & Co., were charged, on the complaint of that firm, with cheating by having dishonestly induced them to deliver to A certain sums of money between 1882 and 1887, and with having abetted each other in the commission of the said offence. The offence charged was carried out by T omitting to make entries in the account books of sums due by A to the firm, and by making false entries therein of payments by A. Whilst the charge was pending, the Presidency Magistrate, before whom the charge had been made, granted a search-warrant in the following terms: "To Inspector M—Whereas A and another have been charged before me with the commission or suspected commission of the offence of cheating, and it has been made to appear to me that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the enquiry now being made, or about to be made, into the said offence or suspected offence, this is to authorize and require you to search for the said property in the house of A, No. 13, Pollock Street, and if found to produce the same forthwith before this Court." In execution of this warrant, certain books and papers found in the house of A were seized and taken possession of by the police, and of those books and papers the Magistrate, on the application of the prosecution, made an order for inspection. On a rule granted by the High Court to show cause why the order for inspection should not be set aside, it was contended that the search-warrant had been granted without proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials; that it was bad on the face of it, as it did not "specify clearly," as directed in Form VIII, sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code, whose khatta books were to be produced; and that there was nothing in the criminal law to enable a Court to make an order for inspection of documents by the prosecution in a criminal case. Held per NORRIS, J., that, assuming the contention as to the search-warrant arose on the rule as granted, the warrant must be looked at as a whole, and so looked at it sufficiently and clearly showed that it was the khatta books of A which were referred to as being essential to the inquiry and the objects of the directed search; nor was there anything to show that the warrant was issued otherwise than regularly and in due course. Per NORRIS, J.—Though the Courts in England have constantly refused to compel discovery in criminal cases, on the ground that no man should be compelled to produce evidence to criminate himself, the Legislature in this country has authorized the production, and under certain circumstances the compulsory production, of an accused person's documents in Court. When once an accused person's documents are in the possession of the Court by virtue of the due execution of a search-warrant issued under the provisions of s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is no distinction between such documents and those of any description found upon his person at the time of his arrest or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, and it was never doubted that the latter may be used in evidence against him. If, as laid down in the case of Dillon v. O'Brien, 90 Irish L. R., 800, the right to seize and detain property of any description in the possession of a person lawfully arrested for treason, felony, or misdemeanor, rests "upon the interest which the State has in a person justly or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice and in a prosecution once commenced being determined in due course of law," a right to inspect such property must exist, as well as a right to seize and detain it, and the proper persons to inspect it are those conducting the prosecution. It would, moreover, be unreasonable that the police or those conducting the prosecution should not have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents, etc., found on a prisoner when arrested, or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them in evidence. Per GHOSH, J.—The contention as to the validity of the search-warrant did not arise on the rule as granted, but seemle that the search-warrant was bad in law, no summons under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code having been, in the first instance, issued for the production of the documents, and there being no evidence to show that they would not be produced on summons only; that although the warrant was not specific, still, inasmuch as no objection was raised to the form of the warrant before the Magistrate, and the accused had not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents being somewhat indistinct, and it was clear what was really meant, the objection as to the form of the warrant should be disallowed. Per GHOSH, J.—There is no doubt that by the criminal law of this country, as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code since 1861, an accused person may be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of criminating him. The Magistrate has to determine at the time when he makes an order under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or issues a search-warrant under s. 96, whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry; but when they are brought into Court, the inspection should not rest with the Magistrate who does not prosecute and has no interest one way or the other in the result of the prosecution. It is reasonable that those who conduct the prosecution should have such inspection, for the production of such documents is for the purpose of using them in evidence, and this could not be done unless the prosecution had an opportunity of inspecting them. In the case of a search or seizure by the police under Ch. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecutor would necessarily have an opportunity of looking at the documents and articles seized, and there is no reason why he should not have the same opportunity or privilege where, under the order of the Court, any particular document or other thing is seized under a search-warrant and brought up to the Court. Bearing in mind the purpose for which any document or thing is seized and brought before the Court, it seems that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, etc., intended by implication that the prosecution should, under the order of the Court, have the power to inspect them, and determine whether they should go in as evidence. Held per Curiam—for the reasons above given—that the Magistrate had power to allow the inspection, but such inspection must be limited to the books named in the search-warrant. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF AHMED MAHOMED. MAHOMED JACKANIAN & Co. v. AHMED MAHOMED. I L. R., 15 Cal., 109

28. — Summons to produce document or thing—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 94.—A complaint having been preferred against an accused for criminal breach of trust with reference (amongst other items) to a sum of Rs. 77,181-1-2, which sum was, in an enquiry held by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, proved to have been paid to the accused in seventeen notes of rupees ten thousand each (the numbers of which were identified) and the remainder in small notes and cash, the accused in cross-examination, for his own purposes, proved that fifteen of these notes were still in his possession; whereupon an application was made, under s. 94 of the Code, for a summons on the accused, directing the production of these notes. This application was refused. Subsequently, the accused, through a third person, cashed five of these notes, whereupon a second application was made under s. 94 by the prosecution for the production of the notes or their proceeds as against accused and such third person.

INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS
—concluded.3. CRIMINAL CASES—concluded.

The Magistrate granted summonses on the accused and on such third person for the production of ten notes, but declined to grant a summons for such third person for the proceeds of the five notes cashed. The accused produced five of these notes which were in his possession or power; the third person, however, stating that he had in his power five of the notes mentioned in the summons, claimed a lien on the same, and the Magistrate thereupon refused to make any order on him. The Magistrate (a rule having been obtained against him, calling on him to show cause why his order should not be set aside, and why the notes or the proceeds thereof in the hands of the third person should not be produced) stated in his explanatory letter that he entertained doubts as to his power to compel such third person to produce the five notes, inasmuch as a lien had been claimed on them, and that he was of opinion that the proceeds of the notes cashed, not being specific objects, did not come within the purview of s. 94. Held the Magistrate's order must be set aside. *IN THE MATTER OF THE NIZAM OF HYDERABAD v. INSPECTION OF PROPERTY.

Form of order for inspection—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 499—Judicature Acts, Order 50, Rule 3.—The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for damages alleged to have been caused to his house by the erection by the defendant of an adjoining house. On an application by the defendant for an order allowing him or his agents to enter into the house of the plaintiff for the purpose of inspecting, examining, and surveying the alleged injuries and for the purpose of examining the materials employed therein and formations thereof and to dig excavations for the purpose of exposing the foundations, it was objected by the plaintiff that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, as the house of which inspection was sought was not the "subject of the suit" within s. 499 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that, if the order could be made for inspection of the house, it could not be made for inspection of the house, including the zenana apartments, and further that no order could be made for the excavation of the foundations. Held that the house and premises of the plaintiff formed the "subject of the suit" within the meaning of s. 499, and under that section the Court had power to make the order applied for. Held also that this was a case in which the order should be made. *DHORMONY DHUR GHOSH v. 1. LIFE INSURANCE.1. — Assignment of policy—

Death of assignee—Death of assured—Notice by assignee to company—Payment of premium by executors of assignee—Absence of legal personal representative of assured—Refusal to pay over.—A, having insured his life in a certain Life Insurance Company, assigned his rights under the policy to B, the assignment on the face of it expressing no consideration whatever. The fact of the assignment was notified to the company. B, after paying all premium due, died, appointing C and D his executors, who took out probate of his will, and paid all subsequent premium on the policy. A died, and C and D then demanded payment of the policy-money. The company, however, refused payment unless C and D first obtained the concurrence of the legal representative of A to the payment. Held that the company were justified in refusing to pay the money in the absence of the legal representative of A. RAJNARAIN BOSE v. UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

2. — Age of assured—Proof of age—

Onus of proof—Mistake in statement of age—Fraud.—A insured his life with the defendant company. By the terms of the policy the declaration of the assured as to his age was made the basis of the contract, and the policy was issued, subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration were untrue, the policy should be void. The assurance was also expressly made, subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. The prospectus contained the following provision with regard to the age of parties insured: "Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time; if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim;" and after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age," which the company would accept, the prospectus continued: "The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible and get the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced." A died, and his administrators claimed the amount of the policy. Held that the above condition contained in the prospectus, which must be read into the policy, imposed on the assured or his representatives the obligation of giving proof of age before the company could be called upon to pay. If the evidence had been given in the lifetime of the assured, and an admission of age was attached to the policy, no further proof would be needed, and the onus of disputing the age would be thrown on the company; but in the absence of such evidence and of such admission, it lay upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured. The prospectus of the company contained a further provision that "policies held by parties on their own lives are indisputable on any ground whatever except fraud." Held that this provision did not relieve those claiming upon the policy from the burden of giving proof of age, but it covered a misstatement as to age as well as other misstatements, provided they were not fraudulent. It relieved the assured from the legal effect which an innocent misrepresentation as to age would otherwise have had under the strict terms of the contract. The result therefore was that the plaintiffs should give proof of the age of the assured, but, if such proof disclosed nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policy would not be vitiated. Subject to the above terms of the prospectus, any untruth in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement as to the age of the assured amounts to a warranty, and the warranty being broken, the risk under the policy would not attach. ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SECURITY LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. SARAT CHANDRA CHATTERJI

3. — Premiums on policy—Condition of prepayment of premium—Waiver—Sterling premiums—Case stated under Ch. XXXVIII, Code of Civil Procedure.—An insurance company, in order to carry out an agreement with the assured to convert a rupee policy into a policy of sterling value, made an endorsement of the conversion on his policy, it being stated that such conversion was in consideration of all future premiums being paid in sterling. The policy so endorsed was re-delivered to the assured without any demand for the prepayment of the first sterling premium. Subsequently, and before the first sterling premium became due, the assured died. Held that the prepayment of sterling premium as a condition precedent to the right to the sterling assurance had been waived, and that the representatives of the assured were entitled to payment of the full amount of the sterling policy. Canning v. III, c. 48—Stat. 5 & 9 Vict., c. 106—Assignment of life policy to a stranger without interest in the life insured.—The defendant company issued a policy for a term of ten years for Rs25,000, on the 23rd August 1894, on the life of M, the wife of one A, who was a clerk in the employment of one N F B, a barrister practising at Hyderabad. On the 1st September 1894, M assigned the policy to the plaintiff A, who was the wife of N F B. On the 2nd October 1894 M died. The plaintiff as assignee of the policy brought this suit to recover Rs 25,000 from the defendants. The defendant (inter alia) contended that the policy had really been effected not by M or for her use or benefit or on her account, but by the said N F B for his own use and benefit, and that he had no interest in the life of M, and that therefore the policy was void. Held (1) on the evidence that the policy had not been effected by M or for her use and benefit, but had been effected by N F B for his own use and benefit, and that he had no interest in the life of M. (2) That in India an insurance for a term of years on the life of a person in which the insurer has no interest is void as a wagering contract under a 30 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that therefore the policy sued on was void. Quære—Whether an assignment of a life policy to a stranger having no interest in the life of the insured is void? *ALAMAT v. 5. ——— Truth of answers to queries of Life Insurance Company—Warranty—Declaration by assured to Medical Examiner of Company—Admissibility of evidence to show declarations not made by assured—Verbal representation to Medical Examiner, Effect of.—G applied to the defendant company in Calcutta to insure his life for the sum of Rs 10,500, to be secured by five different policies. The policies were duly executed by the company and delivered to the plaintiff, the wife of G, on his behalf. The company's printed form of application for insurance and the printed form of declarations to the medical examiner of the company were signed by G. The agreement of G with the company was that the statements and representations contained in his application, together with those made to the medical examiner by him, should be the basis of the contract between him and the company. He warranted them to be full, complete, and true, whether written by his own hand or not, and that the warranty was to be a condition precedent to, and a consideration for, the policy, which might be issued thereon; and he further agreed that no statements, representations, or information made or given by or to any person soliciting or taking the application for the policy, or by or to any other person, should be binding on the company, or in any way affect its rights unless such statements, representations, or information be reduced to writing and presented to the officers of the said company at their home office in the city of New York on the application. On G's death, the plaintiff sued the company for the amounts due under the policies. The plaintiff admitted that certain statements and representations made by G both in his applications and declaration to the medical examiner were untrue, but urged that it was open to her to show (1) that G signed the declaration to the medical examiner before it was filled up, and in consequence was not responsible for the contents of that declaration; (2) that G showed to the medical examiner a certain statement drawn up by G of an illness he had suffered from for three years, and that the knowledge thus acquired by the medical examiner must be imputed to the company. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the plaintiff was bound by the terms of the contract between G and the company. That it was not open to the plaintiff to show that G did not state what under his own signature he declared to be true, and yet to hold the company liable on the policy brushing aside and treating as of no import whatever the statements and representations which form the basis of the contract. That the misstatements and misrepresentations made by G were amply sufficient to warrant the company in avoiding the policy. NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE Co. v. GAMBLE . . . I. L. R., 27 Cal., 598

6. ——— Open cover—Proposal to issue policy—Acceptance—Refusal to issue policy in terms of open cover.—An open cover to an amount stated for insurance on cargo to be shipped for a voyage in a ship (afterwards lost on that voyage) was given by the agent of the defendant company to the owner of the ship in order that he might give it to the charterer, and it was a proposal to insure. The owner transferred the open cover to the plaintiff, who, under charter with him, shipped rice and applied for policies to the amount stated in the open cover. The defendants' agent then refused to issue any policy on the rice so shipped. Held that the open cover, as given to the owner, constituted a subsisting proposal to insure, and as soon as application for the policy under it was made to the defendants' agent by the shipper, to whom the open cover had been transferred, there was a binding contract that a policy should be issued in its terms. That the shipper asked for two policies did not, under the circumstances, prevent there being an acceptance, there having been a refusal to issue any policy. *BRUGMAN DAS v. The words "and to all ports and places" were written, the rest being printed. B & Co. in their written statement admitted the policy, but set up the following exception: "All risks or losses arising from detention, etc., also from storms and gales of wind, or other perils of the sea, while touching or trading on the coast of Coromandel from Point Palmyras to Ceylon, and within soundings, between the 15th October and the 15th December inclusive, are hereby excepted, which risks or losses are to be borne by the assured, and not by the insurers, notwithstanding anything to the contrary hereinbefore expressed." Held, firstly, it lay upon A to prove that the loss did not fall within the exception. Held, secondly, that the meaning of the policy was that the ship was to be at liberty to proceed to or stay at any port she pleased, but that the insurers were not liable for any loss arising from perils of the sea in which the three following events were combined: first, that she was at the time touching or trading on the coast of Coromandel; secondly, that she was at the time within soundings; thirdly, that the loss happened between the 15th October and 15th December. Held, thirdly upon the facts, the loss was within the policy, notwithstanding the exception. AGA SYUD SADUCK v. 9. ————— Goods partly in bales and partly in cases Insurance for gross amount.—A policy was effected upon a quantity of piece-goods, part in bales and part in cases. The bales and cases were separately enumerated and separately valued in the body of the policy, but the gross total was made up. Held that the words "free from particular average," following directly upon the gross total, must be taken to apply to the whole value of both lots, and not separately to the bales and separately to the cases. BERROFFO SETTY v. HUSSMULL RAMOMUD

9. ————— Particular average loss—Liability of underwriters.—In a policy of insurance effected in Bombay upon goods shipped from Calcutta to Jeddah, two clauses were inserted in writing, the rest of the policy being in the ordinary English printed form. The first written clause was in English as follows: "Warranted free of particular average, unless stranded, sunk, or burnt." The second was written on the margin of the policy in the Gujarathi language, and was to the following effect: "Insurance upon the goods to be without damage. The loss arising from damage is to be on the head of the owner of the goods." Held the underwriters of such a policy are liable to the insurer for a particular average loss where the vessel in which the insured goods are shipped is stranded, sunk, or burnt. ESMAIL v. 10. ————— Notice of claim by insured—Action brought before expiration of six months from date of notice—Constructive total loss—Meaning of the words "sunk," "stranded."—Where insurers on receiving notice of a claim made against them under a policy of insurance distinctly repudiate and deny that any claim exists against them or that the party serving such notice has any right to recover against them, there arises an immediate right to sue, and the insured is not bound to wait for the expiration of six months before taking proceedings to enforce his claim. Where it appeared upon evidence that goods on board a ship that was wrecked on a voyage from Karachi to Bombay, although much damaged by sea-water, were nevertheless of such merchantable value as to make it worth while to send them on to their port of destination, Held, in an action against the insurers of the goods, that no claim for constructive total loss was maintainable. In an action upon a policy of marine insurance the evidence given with respect to the loss of the ship was as follows: "The vessel grounded near Dwarka. After the vessel struck, the water constantly broke right over all. . . . The cargo was all under water. The labourers were only able to work at ebb tide, and at high tide they could only see the top of the vessel's masts. . . . The vessel lay where she stranded seven days, and was then raised with casks." Some of the goods on board were insured by a policy which contained the clause "warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." It was contended for the plaintiffs that the ship had "sunk," and that the damage to the goods was therefore covered by the policy. Held that where a vessel runs aground and lists over, and is in consequence covered by the high tide, which causes damage to goods on board, it cannot be said that she has "sunk" within the meaning of the word as used in a policy of insurance, and therefore that a claim for particular average cannot be sustained under a clause in the policy "warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." LATHAM v. HURBUCKCHAND SOORATRAM

11. ————— Insurable interest—"Interest or no interest," effect of these words in a policy—Stat. 19 Geo. II, c. 37—Loan on "avung"—Insurance effected after loss of subject-matter of insurance—Meaning and effect of the words "lost or not lost" in a policy.—Policies of insurance between natives of India (those, at least, which do not contain the words "interest or no interest") are to be construed in the same way as such instruments have been uniformly construed by the general law merchant in Western Europe, viz., as contracts of indemnity. A certain trade is carried on between native merchants in Western India with the coasts of Africa and Madagascar by means of native vessels which leave the Indian ports early in the year, and after remaining in the ports of Africa and Madagascar for four or five months, leave on the return voyage about August or September. This trade consists in shipping goods at the Indian ports, to be disposed of at the African and Madagascar ports, and purchasing with the proceeds fresh goods to be similarly disposed of in the home ports. To enable traders to embark in this venture, it is their practice to borrow money of merchants on what is termed "avung," that is, money borrowed on the condition that it is not to be repaid except in case of the safe arrival of the goods in the home ports on the return voyage, in which event the loan becomes repayable with interest at a high rate. Held that, having regard to the long-established practice in the part of Bombay of insuring such risks, the interest of the lender of such a loan in the goods on board a ship on her return voyage to India is an insurable interest. Seemle—That an avung loan does not give the lender a charge on the goods. Held that a policy of marine insurance on goods is not invalid by reason of its having been effected subsequently to the loss

12. ——— Separate insurance of different species of article.—Where a policy has been effected on a given quantity of sugar, the fact that that sugar has been described in the margin of the policy as being in different lots containing different species of sugar, and being separately priced, does not raise any presumption that a separate insurance upon each separate species of sugar was intended by a policy-holder. JOSHOOF v. VARDON [1 Hyde, 108]

13. ——— Covering note.—On the 15th March 1897, the plaintiff, who was a shipper of salt, applied for and obtained from the defendants' company in Bombay a preliminary covering note for Rs1000 for salt to be shipped by him from Bombay to Calcutta. The note stated that a stamped policy in completion hereof would be issued on receipt of particulars. The plaintiff's practice was to bring salt from his salt works at Uran in native prows and to put it on board steamers in Bombay harbour. On the 14th April 1897, the plaintiff put 594 bags of salt on board a prow for shipment in the British India steamer Nairang. The transshipment commenced on the 27th April. Forty-nine bags had been transhipped, when a storm arose and the prow shipped water and sank with the remaining 545 bags on board, which were thus wholly lost. Their value was Rs4300. On the 29th April 1897, the plaintiff applied to the defendants' company for a policy and paid the premium, and on the 30th April a policy of insurance was issued to him. It was "an insurance (lost or not lost) at and from Bombay to Calcutta upon any kind of goods and merchandise and freight of or on the ship or vessel called the Nairang, including all risk of craft and boat to or from the ship or vessel." Upon this policy the plaintiff sued to recover the value of the lost salt, viz., Rs4300. The defendants pleaded that the covering note of 15th March 1897 did not establish a completed agreement for the insurance of the salt; and as to the policy they pleaded that it was void, inasmuch as the loss had occasioned at the time of issue, and that the plaintiff had concealed the fact from them. The plaintiff alleged that information of the loss was given on the 27th April, when the policy was applied for, and he further contended that in any event the defendants were liable, inasmuch as the covering note of 15th March 1897 was a complete and final contract binding upon the defendants, whatever events may subsequently happen. Held, affirming CANDY, J., that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. *KASAM HAJI MITHA v. 15. ——— Evidence of average loss—Usage of Mangalore—Certificate of mahajans.—In the case of a native policy of insurance expressed to be "according to the usage of Mangalore," the certificate of the mahajans at the port of distress or sale, if accompanied by the manifest of the shipment and the account sales, is to be held sufficient evidence of an average loss and of the amount of such loss, though the underwriter may answer a claim supported on such evidence by showing fraud on the part of the shippers, the master of the vessel, or the mahajans. An alleged usage that the mahajans' certificate is deemed to be conclusive evidence against the underwriter without production of manifest and account sales, and that on proof of the certificate alone and of the policy the owner is entitled to recover his average loss, cannot be upheld, such not being a reasonable usage. *RANSORDASS BHOGILAL v. 16. ——— Repairs to ship—Deduction of one-third new for old.—It appeared on evidence that a ship was not by the repairs done to her put in a better condition than she had been in before sustaining the damage which constituted the partial loss. Held that the rule, by which a deduction of one-third new for old is calculated in favour of the insurers who pay for the repairs, did not apply. SERDICH GHOSAL v. APCAR. Bourke, 418

On appeal in same case, — Held the rule allowing one-third "new for old" in cases of insurances on ships is not inflexible; therefore, where the ship insured was not worth repairing, and was not in fact repaired, it was held that one-third "new for old" ought not to be allowed. *APCAR v. 20. ——— Abandonment—Notice of abandonment.—Where an insurance office is sued on a constructive total loss, there must be a distinct and decided abandonment of all right on the part of the insured. The notice of abandonment should be immediate. The question always is whether the delay in giving notice is reasonable, with reference to the particular circumstances and the owner's means of ascertaining the position of the ship; where the suit is for a total loss, the judgment may be as for an average loss. SERDICK GHOSAL v. APCAR

[Bourke, O. C., 391

21. ——— Abandonment of ship and cargo—Sale—Right of purchaser.—The ship Maharanees was wrecked and abandoned with her cargo to the underwriters. Nine cases, part of the cargo which with two others were separately insured, were recovered in good condition from the wreck. Of this all parties had notice. The wreck and cargo were subsequently sold by the ship's agents, who were also agents for the underwriters, for the benefit of all concerned, the cargo being described generally. Held that the nine cases did not pass to the purchaser at the sale, as they could not be legally abandoned; and on the facts that the defendants were not liable as having induced the plaintiff to believe that they intended to sell more than what was ceded to the underwriters by the abandonment. MITCHELL v. 22. ——— Constructive total loss.—In a suit on a policy of insurance as for a total loss, where goods were shipped for the voyage from Surat to Kurrachee, and the vessel having sprung a leak was forced to put into Dwarka, at which place the goods (with exception of some iron thrown overboard during the voyage) were landed and placed in a warehouse, from which a portion (some castor oil and jagari) was carried off by robbers; and the residue of the cargo, consisting principally of cotton seeds which were dried and cleaned, was sold; and the proceeds, after deducting freight expenses, remained in the hands of mahajans, to be paid to whomsoever might be entitled to them,—Held, first, that the loss by robbers, although not expressly mentioned in the policy, was one of the perils insured against; second, that the Judge below being erroneously of opinion that when the goods were once landed damaged there was nothing to do but to sell everything for the benefit of underwriters, and having consequently recorded no finding on the material question whether the whole or any part of the cargo was practically capable of being sent in a marketable state to the port of destination, the suit must be remanded, in order that the Judge might determine whether there was a constructive total loss which entitled the plaintiffs to abandon; and if not, that he might award such a proportion of the value of the iron and of the jagari and oil which were actually lost, and of the amount of the deterioration in the cotton seeds and other articles, as the sum insured by the defendant bore to the whole sum, taking into account also in that case what proportion the sum insured bore to the actual value of the goods. DWARKADAS LALUBHAI v. 23. ——— Value of ship when repaired.—In a suit to recover the amount of insurance on a ship which had been abandoned on an alleged constructive total loss, it appeared that the ship had sustained severe injury from foul weather, but that her value, after being repaired, would exceed the cost of repairing her by about 3,000 dollars. Held therefore that there was not a constructive total loss, and that, in order to establish a constructive total loss, there must have been a threatened destruction, or absolute temporary privation, of the insurer's ownership, or an alienation of his property in the thing insured. GAHAN v. 24. ——— Notice of abandonment.—A cargo, consisting of railway sleepers, was insured by the plaintiffs in the ship Heimdhall from Geography Bay to Calcutta, and expressed in the policy to be warranted from all risks, except total loss. In proceeding up the river Hooghly, in charge of a pilot, on the 30th April, the vessel grounded on the Rungrafulla Sand, heeled over, and lay imbedded in the sand. Endeavours were made unsuccessfully to get her off. On 5th May, Lloyd's surveyor inspected the vessel, and reported that, considering her position, the state of the tide at that season, and the expense of getting her off, it was unadvisable to go to further expense in doing so; and that the cost of repairs would, in all probability, amount to much more than the value of the ship when repaired. Some of the sleepers had been then jettisoned, and the surveyor recommended that the vessel and cargo should be abandoned and sold by public auction to the highest bidder. Attempts were made, but unsuccessfully, to get some of the cargo off, and the sleepers were of such a quality that they would not float. The consignees accordingly caused the ship and cargo to be sold by public auction in Calcutta on 12th May. No notice of abandonment was given. The sleepers realized the sum of Rs450. The purchaser hired boats and began unloading the ship; he unloaded 78 sleepers in all. On 14th May the ship floated off and came up the river, with the rest of the cargo, in safety, proving not to be so much damaged as was supposed. In an action on the policy of insurance,—Held that there was not such a total loss of the cargo as entitled the plaintiffs to recover as for a total loss without giving notice of abandonment. Held, on appeal, per PHEAR and MACPHERSON, JJ.—The plaintiffs failed to prove any necessity for the sale of the ship, or that it was impracticable to convey the sleepers, or a material portion of them, to their destination. But if the insured were legally justified in abandoning and claiming as for a total loss, notice of abandonment ought to have been given. The condition and behaviour of the ship when she got off the shoal should be looked at as indicating her real state and strength while she was on it. Per PAUL, J.—Considering upon the evidence of the circumstances at the time of the sale that the ship was not worth repairing, and that she was expected to sink at any time, the sale of her was justifiable. The sale of the cargo was also justifiable; it could not have been carried, in a mercantile sense, on shore, much less to its destination. The sale caused a total loss, and there was no need for notice of abandonment. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. AUSTRALASIAN INSURANCE COMPANY . . . 6 B. L. R., 218

INTENTION OF PARTIES—concluded.

Intention as to future action, expressed between parties, not amounting to a contract—Expressed intention to make particular person an heir—Effect in succession of reversionary heirs.—A mutual expression of intention between parties caused expectation on either side that the intention would be carried out, but no contract was made. A childless person, since deceased, expressed to the father of the minor son of his sister his intention to make the boy his heir, and that, if he, the intending donor, should have children of his own, he would give the boy a share of his property. The father assented and made over charge of the boy. The widow and mother of the deceased, taking his estate for their lives, admitted the boy to joint possession with them, and, on being sued by the reversioners of the family estate expectant upon their deaths, defended, as co-defendants with the boy, on the ground that they had, in obedience to the known wishes of the deceased, recognized the boy as heir to him. Held that the reversioners could only be deprived of the inheritance after the death of the widows, who could not transfer any estate to last beyond their own lives, by the act of the deceased in contracting with the father of the boy to make the boy the heir, if such contract had been made. And that the substantial question was whether the representations made between the two had amounted to a contract to that effect. On evidence wholly oral, it was found that no such contract had been made. Only enough had been said between the two to give rise to the expectation on either side that the boy would, if the then intended course being followed, get the inheritance.

11. — Discretion of Court.—Every arrear of rent, unless it is otherwise provided by an agreement in writing, is liable to bear interest at 12 per cent. from the time when it, or each instalment of it, became due. The discretion which a Court has to refuse interest can only be exercised upon very clear grounds. The mere non-enforcement by a landlord, even for a series of years, of his right to interest upon arrears of rent does not amount to a waiver of such right. JOHORY LALL v. BULLAB LALL I. L. R., 5 Cal., 102

12. — Waiver—Omission to claim rent for some years at the stipulated rate, whether amounts to a waiver.—The mere omission to claim interest for some years from a tenant at the rate stipulated in the lease does not amount to a waiver of the landlord's right to claim interest at such rate. JOHORY LALL v. 13. — Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 21—Rate of interest.—Under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 21, it is discretionary with the Judge to give interest at 12 per cent.; he is not obliged to award interest to that extent. DHIRAJ MAHTAB CHAND v. DEBKUMARI DEBI

14. — Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 21—Discretion of Court.—In suits for arrears of rent, a Court of Justice is not bound in every instance to award interest at 12 per cent., the rate specified in Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 21, but has discretion either to disallow interest altogether, or to reduce the rate according to the circumstances of each case. Where a plaintiff sought to recover more than what was actually due, and it did not appear that defendant would have refused payment if the sum actually due had been demanded, the Court reduced the rate of interest to 6 per cent. FUSSEEBUX v. ASHNUFOONNISSA 26 W. R., 468

15. — Erroneous dismissal of suit by lower Appellate Court after admission of sum due.—A suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates where plaintiff fails to adduce sufficient evidence to support his claim for enhancement should not be dismissed altogether if defendant admits a certain sum to be due for the years in question, but should be decreed to the extent of the admission. In such a case where the first Court had decreed rent at the rates admitted with some enhancement, and the lower Appellate Court, seeing no grounds for enhancement, dismissed the suit, the High Court granted the amount admitted with interest from the date of the first Court's decree. AKASH-BUTTY KOOR v. dated March 1880, the plaintiff put up the tenure for sale and the defendant purchased it on the 20th November 1891. Subsequently, a suit for rent with interest at 225 per cent. per annum, specified in the kabuliat executed by the former tenant, was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. The defence was that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest at such a high rate. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest at the rate claimed, it being an exorbitant one and not an ordinary incident of a tenancy. Held also that in such a case the rule relating to hard and unconscionable bargains should apply—Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v. Kaliprosunno Ghose, I. L. R., 18 Cal., 225; L. R., 12 I. A., 915—and the plaintiff would be entitled to interest at 12 per cent. per annum, being the ordinary rate of interest for arrears of rent. Per RAMPINI, J.—By the sale of an ordinary raiyati tenancy for arrears of rent, a new contract is created between the auction-purchaser and the landlord at the date of the sale; therefore, in a case where the tenure was sold after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, and a suit was brought by the landlord for rent with interest against the auction-purchaser, the provisions of s. 67, read with s. 178, sub-s. (3), cl. (A), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, would apply.

27. ——— Award—Power of Court to give interest.—A Court has no discretion to deal judicially with the merits of a case determined by arbitrators, but is bound to pass judgment according to their award. Accordingly, it cannot decree interest which the arbitrators have not awarded. MOHUN LAL SHAHA v. JOY NARAIN SHAHA CHOWDHRY

28. ——— Bill of exchange—Deduction of interest as discount from bill of exchange—Interest according to rules published by loan company.—It is not illegal to deduct interest in the shape of discount from the amount advanced on a bill of exchange, if such deduction be made with the full knowledge and consent of the borrower, and under such circumstances as would not lead to the inference that unfair advantage was taken of the position of the borrower. The fact that a loan company, registered under the provisions of Act X of 1866, has published and caused to be registered rules regarding the payment of interest on loans, does not bind a borrower to pay the interest as required by those rules unless he has contracted to do so. TIPPERAH LOAN OFFICE v. GOUR CHUNDER BARMAN

29. ——— Bond—Construction of bond—Calculation of interest.—On the adjustment of an account of the principal and interest due on a bond, a kararnamah or deed of agreement was entered into by the parties, in which, besides the original sum, a further sum for interest accrued thereon was declared due and agreed to be paid off by instalments before a given time. Payments were made at irregular periods, which payments the bond-holder claimed to appropriate to keeping down the interest upon the whole sum composed of both the original principal sum as well as the sum mentioned in the kararnamah as accrued thereon for interest. Held, upon the construction of the instrument, that the principal sum alone carried interest, and that all payments made in pursuance of the stipulations were to be applied in the first instance to satisfy such interest, the excess of the payments only being appropriated towards the liquidation of the principal sum due. RAMUNDOS MOOKERJEE v. OMNISH CHUNDER RAY

[6 Moore's I. A., 259]

30. ——— Payments on bond—Mode of calculating interest.—Where payment was made upon a bond, the amount paid being less than the interest due, Held the payment ought to go to reduce the amount of interest due, and the creditor in a suit upon the bond was entitled to a decree for the principal and balance of interest up to date of decree. LUCHMESWAR SINGH v. LUTY ALI KHAN

[8 B. L. R., P. C., 110]

31. ——— Compound interest—Interest per mensem.—Interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem, to be calculated at the end of each year, does not mean compound interest, so as to admit of interest being charged upon the note, but interest calculated per mensem, but payable per annum. *RAJUMDAR NARAIN RAY v. moiety claimed by him of the sum which he alleged to be due for principal and arrears of interest at 12 per cent.) equal to the principal upon a certain kararnamah and bond, and to allow the interest from the date of the institution of the suit up to realization. Held, further, that in the account taken by the appellant as the foundation for his proceedings in execution he was not warranted in making a rest at the date of the order of the Principal Sudder Ameen dismissing the suit, and assuming that interest should run upon the consolidated sum from that date; as in the absence of special directions it could not be presumed that the Appellate Court intended to make an order enunc pro tunc which would give compound interest from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance. GOPIN KISSAN GOSSAMEN v. BRINDABUN CHANDER SIRCAR 19 W. R., P. C., 41

33. ———— Illegal contract
—Sonthal Pergunnahs Settlement Regulation (III of 1873), s. 6—Sonthal Pergunnahs Justice Regulation (V of 1893), s. 24—"Unlawful" consideration, Meaning of.—There is no law or regulation laying down that an agreement between any two persons living in the Sonthal Pergunnahs to pay compound interest upon the amount borrowed is "unlawful" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Contract Act. All that the law provides is that compound interest will not be decreed by any Court. Referring to the Sonthal Regulations, s. 6 of Regulation III of 1873 and s. 24 of Regulation V of 1893, it was held in respect of an agreement to pay interest on an amount composed partly of the principal and interest due on a former debt that such agreement is not void under s. 24 of the Contract Act, and that the obligee may recover such sums of money as he is entitled in law to recover, notwithstanding that part of the consideration is compound interest. SHAMA CHARAN MISHRA v. CHUNI LAL MARWARI . . . I. L. R., 26 Calc., 238

34. ———— Costs—Costs not mentioned in decree.—Held that the principle of the Full Bench ruling, Moswoodon Lall v. Bhakaree Singh, B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 602: 6 W. R., Mis., 109, is as much applicable to interest upon costs as it is to interest upon mesne profits not awarded by the decree, and must be applied to all decrees passed, either before or after the date of that judgment. LEELANUND SINGH v. RAM NARAIN SINGH 15 W. R., 415

39. ———— Interest not mentioned in decree—Decree of Privy Council—Mesne profits.—In a suit to recover certain property, the plaintiff obtained a decree for a portion thereof, but on appeal the High Court reversed the decree and declared him entitled to the whole. On appeal to the Privy Council, the decree was that the decision of the High Court be "reversed with costs," and the decree of the first Court "affirmed with costs." On this the first Court ordered the restitution of the property with wasilat, and also that the defendant should obtain interest on the costs both of the first Court and of the Privy Council; but he disallowed the costs of the High Court as not being expressly awarded by the Privy Council decree. Held the defendant was entitled to mesne profits. Interest on the costs of the Privy Council should not be given, the decree being silent on the point; but the costs of the first Court would carry interest. The words "with costs" in the portion of the decree of the Privy Council affirming the decree of the first Court mean the costs of the proceedings in the High Court. GURUDAS RAI v. STEPHENS

42. ———— Privy Council order awarding costs—Execution of decree—Act XXIII of 1861, ss. 10 and 11—Interest not given by decree.—Where an order passed by Her Majesty in Council on report of the Judicial Committee awards costs, but is silent as to interest on the costs so awarded, it is not competent to the Court which has to execute the order to direct payment of the costs with interest. The principle of the decisions in cases arising under ss. 10 and 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, which have established a similar rule of practice in executing decrees passed by the Courts in India, approved. twice credited as alleged by the obligor (appellant), the Court held that it had only once been credited. The respondent on cross-appeal claimed interest on the Rs 350 for six years and eight months at twelve per cent. per annum, on the strength of a stipulation in the bond that, from a certain date, interest should accrue on the principal; but the Court disallowed the claim on the ground that payment of interest on the item paid as Government revenue was neither expressly stipulated for nor contemplated by the parties, and because it was open to the respondent to take measures to realize the sum so paid instead of letting it lie over and double itself by interest. SHIBSUNDER DEBIA v. LADLY 17 W. R., 71

54. ————— Mortgages in possession—Suit for redemption.—The principle of construction, that when a creditor sues for his principal and interest (the latter being equal or more than equal at the time of the commencement of the suit to the principal) he is not debarred from charging subsequent interest for the period during which he is kept out of his money by the debtor's resistance of the demand, is not applicable to a case in which a mortgagee in possession is not a party suing for the money, but the party resisting by every means in his power a claim to redemption and the final settlement of the account. AIMUT ALI KHAN v. 58. ————— Interest on price and charges not legally demandable in absence of special contract.—The defendant made an offer in writing to the plaintiffs for the purchase of 200 bales of pepperill drill at 9s. 2d. A few days later the plaintiffs' salesman tendered for signature to the defendant an indent containing certain terms not contained in the original offer, and in particular containing the words, "Free Bombay Harbour and interest." This the defendant refused to sign. The plaintiffs, however, ordered out the goods, and on their arrival tendered them to the defendant, demanding at the same time such sums for charges, expenses, and interest as would have been due under a contract entered into on the added terms. These the defendant refused to pay. In a suit claiming the deficiency (after a sale by public auction of the 200 bales). Held that, in the absence of any contract to that effect, interest could not be legally demanded on the contract price, and still less could it be demanded on the incidental charges in the invoice. MAHOMED HAJI JIVA v. 76. ———— Payment in satisfaction of decree—Payment subject to objection.—A judgment-debtor who wants to be released from the claim of his creditor must pay the money covered by the decree into Court to the credit of the decree-holder unconditionally. If he chooses to make a protest, the creditor is not bound to take the money out, subject to any liability which may arise as the consequence of such protest. A got a decree against B for a sum of money, the balance of an account. B deposited the amount of the decree in Court objecting that Rs. 9,000, part of that sum, should not be paid out to A on the ground that he had appealed as to three items of the account which covered that amount. The lower Court paid no attention to the objection, but did not formally disallow it, and A declined to take the Rs. 9,000. B's appeal having been dismissed, A applied for the Rs. 9,000, and got it. He then applied for interest thereon during the time it had been deposited in Court. Held that he was entitled to it, for it was owing to B's act that A had been deprived of the money during the period for which he claimed interest. RAJENDRA KISHORE SING v. a. 28, to India, it was enacted "That upon all debts for sums certain payable at a certain time, the Court before whom such debt or sums may be recovered may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest, from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of a me written instrument at a certain time." An instrument in the nature of, though not strictly, a bond was executed in 1833, which provided for the liquidation of the amount therein specified by instalments, but no provision was made for the allowance of interest. The condition for payment not having been performed,—Held, in an action brought in 1849 to recover principal and interest upon the bond, that the Act XXXII of 1839 was retrospective in its operation and authorized the allowance of interest, although it was not provided for in the bond. BOMMARAUZE BAHADUR v. RANGASAMY MUDALI

88. ————— Notice—Previous suit between the parties.—Where, in order to entitle the plaintiff to charge interest, a notice by law is required to be served upon the defendant, the existence of a previous litigation upon the same subject-matter is a sufficient notice. MOPOKHUL MOOLEK MUSSEERUD DOWLA SYED SUFDAR ALLY KHAN v. MACKINTOSH 2 Hay, 123

90. ————— Effect of Act—Payments of revenue by one co-sharer.—Act XXXII of 1839 provided that the Court may allow interest on sums of money payable by virtue of a written instrument, at a certain time, or, "if payable otherwise, then from the time when demand of payment shall have been made in writing, so as such demand shall give notice to the debtor that interest will be claimed." Held that the statute had not the effect of restraining the power of the Court to allow interest in other cases, in which interest was allowed before the Act. Therefore interest may be allowed on payments of revenue made by one co-sharer on behalf of others, notwithstanding no demand of interest may have been made before suit. GOLAM AHMED SHAH v. 98. ————— Decree of Privy Council, Interest on—Interest on costs.—Where a decree of the Privy Council gives interest, but does not clearly specify the rate, the Court should ascertain, if possible, from the other parts of the decree itself, or from other documents which may be read in conjunction with the decree, what rate was intended to be given. AVERROONISA KHATOON v. MAHOMED MOZAFFER HUSSEIN 18 W. R., 109

99. ————— Notice of intention to claim interest—Demand of interest already due. A letter demanding interest on an outstanding debt, from which the intention of the creditor to claim interest up to date of payment is made clear, is a sufficient notice, within the meaning of the Interest Act, 1839, to entitle the creditor to claim interest prospectively from the date of the letter, though the demand be made retrospectively in respect of interest alleged to be then already due. KUPPUSAMI PILLAI v. 100. ————— Interest, power of Court to allow—Actionable right to interest—Compound interest.—Act XXXII of 1839 enables the Court to allow interest in certain cases, but does not create a right to interest which could be made the subject-matter of a suit. It is doubtful whether the Act gives power to allow compound interest on a debt, but even if there is such jurisdiction, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, will not allow compound interest except where it is expressly provided for by the agreement. MARSHALL v. BENGAL SPINNING AND WEAVING CO.

[1 C. W. N., 219]

101. ————— Whether a Court is to allow interest from the date of the debt where there is no contract to pay, and no demand made for payment of interest.—In a suit for money lent without any written instrument, where it was found that there was no express contract to pay interest, but it was not found that any demand of payment was made in writing and that there was any demand giving notice to the debtor that interest would be claimed from the date of the demand, it was held that the creditor was not entitled to any interest before suit. SURENDRA KUMAR BASU v. 103. ————— Rate of interest—Interest up to date of filing of plaint.—Interest at the stipulated rate should only be allowed up to the date of the filing of the plaint; afterwards at the Court rate of six per cent. ANDERSON v. SREEMUNTO. ANDERSON v. RAJNARAIN DOSS. Cor., 3

104. ————— Interest before and after decree—Suit for arrears of maintenance.—A, on behalf of her infant son B, contracted with C that he should be allowed, for the maintenance of her daughter whom he was about to marry, land situate at X that should yield annually Rs. 100. B, after coming of age, contracted at Y to pay C the annual allowance, and ratified the contract which had been made by his mother. Held, in a suit for recovery of certain of the yearly payments, that the Court might decline to allow interest on the arrears found to be due prior to the commencement of the suit, there being no stipulation in the contract for interest, and might award interest on the amount decreed from the commencement of the suit to the date of the decree and interest upon the aggregate amount and upon the costs, from the date of the decree until payment. KISHINKRISHNA GHOSH v. INTEREST—continued.2. OMISSION TO STIPULATE FOR, OR STIPULATED TIME HAS EXPIRED—continued.

105. ————— Discretion of Court.—Interest at the stipulated rate, no matter how onerous, will be awarded down to decree. The rate at which subsequent interest is to be awarded is entirely in the discretion of the Court. If a plaintiff has contracted to receive interest at twelve per cent. only, that rate will be carried down to decree, but should he have contracted for a higher rate, six per cent. only will be allowed. DHUNPUT SINGH DOGARE v. GOLAM HADEN. 2 Hyde, 106: Cor., 12

106. ————— Interest not mentioned in decree.—A plaintiff cannot recover more than is clearly given to him by the decree, either in express terms or by necessary inference. Where the plaint prayed for interest up to the date of the suit together with subsequent interest and the decree purported to be an award in accordance with the prayer of the plaint,—Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest subsequent to the date of the decree. PRABHULANADHO PILLAY v. PONNUSWAMY CHETTI. 6 Mad. Ap., 1

107. ————— Interest between date of filing of plaint and decree—Date of making and date of satisfaction of decree.—The compensation due to a plaintiff for the delay which must ensue between the date when the plaint is filed and the date when the decree can be reasonably expected to be satisfied is, as a general rule, best and most simply estimated by a uniform rate of interest upon the total amount decreed, reckoned from the date of the decree. DOORGA DUTT SINGH v. BURWARAN LAAL SAKHO. 19 W. R., 34

108. ————— Interest where no rate is agreed on after certain time—Reasonable rate—Discretion of Court.—In a suit to recover a sum of money due on an agreement under the term of which interest for fifteen days only was payable at the rate of one rupee per diem,—Held that, as no rate was agreed upon after the expiration of the fifteen days, the Court had power to fix a reasonable rate of interest subsequent to that time. In the matter of MOIZOODDY SHAH. 14 W. R., 450

109. ————— Rate of interest after suit where rate before is stipulated—Assessment of rate.—The Sudder Court having reduced the rate of interest allowed by the Zillah Judge before the commencement of the suit from 12 per cent. to 10 per cent., the rate at which the account current between the parties bore interest, it was held by the Privy Council that the same consideration should have determined the rate of interest to be allowed from the date of suit; and that the amount of this should also be calculated at 10 per cent. per annum. MIRTUNJOY CHUCKERBUTTY v. undertaking to pay interest from the date of suit, which was not provided for by the decree, and the Court by order postponed the sale accordingly. Held that, under the circumstances, it was to be inferred that the Court approved of and sanctioned the condition, and that the condition could be enforced in execution of the decree. LAKSHMANA v. 121. — Decree not specifying rate of interest.—Where a decree did not specify the rate of interest, Held that the Court ought not to have allowed a higher than the usual Court rate, namely, 12 per cent. SOODRA BEEB v. SHYO CHURN LALL

123. — Although the decree in this case did not specify the rate of interest before or after the decree, yet as it appeared that, in calculating the amount then due, the Court gave 12 per cent., and that that was the usual rate, Held that the intention of the Court, when it passed the decree, was to give the same rate. ABDOULLAH v. REAOUT HOSSEIN

124. — Alteration of rate of interest given by decree.—Rate where no rate is specified.—Where a decree awarded a certain sum which was calculated in the schedule, plus costs and interest, the Court executing was held to have committed an error in altering the amount somewhat by reducing the rate of interest during the pendency of the suit. The same Court was pronounced not to have done wrong in estimating the interest, the rate of which was not specified, at a rate which, under the circumstances of the case, it thought reasonable. RUCHOONDUN SINGH v. rule of damdupat at the date of suit. It was objected that this order of further interest violated the rule of damdupat. Held that the discretionary power as to awarding interest conferred on the Courts by s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat. DEONDSHEE v. [I. L. R., 22 Bom., 86]

127. — Decree for sale in suit by puisne mortgagee—Rate agreed on in mortgage—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 10—Civil Procedure Code, s. 209. Upon a claim by a puisne mortgagee to redeem prior incumbrances and in the alternative for a decree ordering the sale of the property mortgaged, the sale was decreed, with application of the purchase-money to pay incumbrances in their due order, and with redemption by the plaintiff of a prior mortgagee who was to have an option to redeem. As regards the Court's power to regulate the interest, Held that, although in the decree for sale the rate of interest on the debt payable to the mortgage decree-holder, was reducible from the date of the decree from the rate stipulated, to the Court rate, an order to that effect could only be made for the benefit of the judgment-debtor as a party to the suit. The plaintiff, seeking to redeem a mortgage prior to the suit, must pay the interest at the rate agreed upon in the mortgage; there being no authority, either under s. 10 of Act XXIII of 1861 or under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 209, to reduce it to the Court rate. UMES CHUNDER SINGH v. His application was dismissed, and he thereupon brought a suit (No. 648 of 1887) for a declaration that the house was not liable in execution of K's decree. That suit was dismissed by the lower Court, and V appealed. Pending the hearing of the appeal, he applied for and obtained under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code an injunction restraining the sale until the result of the appeal on his giving security for interest at six per cent. on Rs. 2,000, the acknowledged value of the house. The appeal was heard in due course and was dismissed with costs, and thereupon K, in execution of the decree in this last-mentioned suit (No. 648 of 1887), applied to recover the interest for which security was ordered to be given by the District Court. Held that he was not entitled to recover it. A Court of execution cannot award interest when the decree is silent. The respondent K had his remedy under s. 497 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that remedy was obtainable on application not to the Court of execution, but to the Court which issued the injunction. *VABAJLAL MULCHAND v. In an action on contracts known as tajee munde chitties—opium wager contracts (before the passing of Act XXI of 1848, which prohibited such gambling contracts)—the plaintiff claimed interest on the sum recovered. Held that, as there was no stipulation as to interest in the contract or satisfactory evidence of mercantile usage at Calcutta to import interest into the contract, the interest claimed could not be allowed. *JUGGOMOHUN GHOSH v. Measure of damages.—A suit was brought in 1884, upon a hypothecation-bond executed in April 1875, in which the obligors agreed to repay the amount borrowed with interest at 11-8 per cent. per mensem, in June of the same year. There was no provision as to payment of interest after due date. The bond specified certain property as belonging to the obligors and contained the following provision: "Our rights and property in the aforesaid talukh Rajapur shall remain pledged and hypothecated for this debt." Interest was claimed in the suit at the rate of 11-8 per cent. per mensem as well for the period after as for the period before the due date of the bond. Held that, although cases might arise in which a jury or a Judge might refuse to give a plaintiff any interest, i.e., damages, post diem, at all, the circumstances would have to be of a very exceptional character as, for example, where the interest contracted to be paid before due date was exorbitant and extortionate. Cooke v. Fowler, L. R., 7 H. L., 27, referred to. Held that in determining the amount of damages the question whether the plaintiff has unnecessarily delayed bringing his suit, and so allowed his claim to mount up to a sum far in excess of the principal money originally advanced, may be taken into consideration as a reason for not making the original rate of interest the basis on which to assess such damages. Jaisa Prasad v. Kishan Singh, I. L. R., 2 All., 617 referred to. The principle upon which the obligee of the bond may recover interest after due date does not rest upon any implied contract by the obligor to pay such interest, but proceeds upon the breach of contract which has taken place by reason of the non-payment on due date, and the reasonable amount to which the obligee is entitled for such breach. Power of Court to alter contract as regards interest—Bond payable by instalments.—Civil Procedure Code (1859), s. 194, (1877) s. 210.—Neither Act VIII of 1859, s. 194, nor Act X of 1877, s. 210, confers any authority on the Courts to relieve a contracting party from such an express stipulation in a bond payable by instalments, as to the consequence of default in punctual payment of the instalments. A debt being presently due, an agreement to pay it by instalments, with a stipulation that on default the creditor may demand immediate payment of the whole balance due with interest is not to be relieved against inquiry. Such a stipulation is not in the nature of a penalty, inasmuch as its object is only to secure payment in a particular manner. The defendant executed to the plaintiff a bond payable by instalments, and expressly stipulating for the payment of the whole amount on failure to pay any instalment on the day fixed. He paid the first instalment, but made default in paying the second, which fell due on the 3rd August 1878. On the 20th August plaintiff sued to recover the whole balance due on the bond. Defendant admitted the bond, but pleaded tender of the amount of the second instalment soon after the due date, and prayed for payment by instalments without any interest. The first Court passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the amount claimed with costs, but ordered defendant to pay Rs 10 and the costs at once, and the balance by yearly instalments of Rs 100 each, with interest at 6 per cent. till payment. The District Judge on appeal affirmed the decree, with a slight variation as to interest, which he directed the defendant to pay on overdue instalments only. Held by the High Court on second appeal that neither of the lower Courts had jurisdiction, without the consent of the parties, to substitute, for the contract made by them, terms which the Court preferred. RAGHO GOVIND PARANJPE v. The Appellate Court amended the decree by awarding interest from the institution of the suit at six per cent. per annum, the rate originally contracted for being twenty-four per cent. per annum. Held that, although the stipulated rate was properly awardable, the award of the lower rate was not illegal or beyond the competence of the Court below, with whose discretion the High Court will not interfere. CARVALHO v. Held that the terms of the bond amounted to a covenant to pay interest at the stipulated rate after the period of three years, so long as the principal remained due; that, the bond containing an express covenant for the payment of interest at that rate, the interest was not affected by the considerations of the reasonableness or otherwise of the rate; and that the mortgagee was therefore entitled to interest up to the date of the decree at the rate of Rs. 2 per mensem. *Buldeo Pandey v. 164. ———— Construction of mortgage—Compound interest—Relative rights of first and second mortgagees of the same property—Mortgage-decree giving terms of redemption of the first by the second.—There being a first and a second mortgage of the same property, a mortgage-decree (that upon the first by consent) was obtained by each mortgagee respectively, neither of them being a party to the decree obtained by the other. In the first mortgage it was agreed that, on default by the mortgagor, interest at 12 per cent. should be paid on the principal and interest taken together, the latter being calculated with annual rests. At a judicial sale under the decree obtained by the first mortgagee, he became the purchaser of the greater part of the property. In this suit, which was brought by the first mortgagee's heir now representing him against the second mortgagee, making the mortgage parties for a declaration of his rights, it was decided that the second mortgagee was entitled to redeem the first mortgage. But the Appellate Court, referring to the consent decree having given simple interest only, made this the basis of an inference that compound interest must now be disallowed. Held that this was not the right inference, and compound interest was allowed according to the terms of the mortgage. GANGA PRASAD SARKU v. In a suit brought more than seven years after the date fixed for payment, the Courts below gave effect to the defence that the creditor had no right under the contract to interest at the rate specified therein for the period after that date; and that limitation barred recovery of money by way of damages for a breach of the contract. Held that the Courts below had erred as to the effect of the contract, and that there had been a failure to regard the intention shown by the conditions in the mortgage-deed above-mentioned, the High Court appearing to have acted on a fixed rule of construction, laid down for transactions of this kind, instead of arriving at the meaning of the deed by an examination of its terms. By the true construction of the contract when the whole of it was considered, the creditor was entitled to payment of the principal with interest at the rate stated in the deed for the entire period of non-payment. This should be down to the date of the decree of the first Court. In the decree should be added interest from its date till payment at six per cent. per annum. Even supposing the construction put by the Courts below to have been correct, the creditor still might have recovered six years' arrears of interest by way of damages, notwithstanding limitation. There had been a breach of contract daily while the principal remained unpaid and unbarred by time. The judgment of the Full Bench in *Narindra Bahadur Pal v. Khodim Husain, I. L. 174. ———— Construction of a contract in a mortgage-deed as to interest.—A deed of mortgage stipulated in general terms that interest was to run upon the principal sums advanced, without any limitation as to the period of its currency; and also stipulated that in default of punctual payment at the end of each year, the mortgagees were to be at liberty to treat unpaid interest as principal, and to recover it from the mortgaged property. According to the tenor of the deed, when all its provisions and conditions were considered, it was not the true construction that the capital sum was to cease to bear interest at the contract rate upon the arrival of the time stipulated for payment. *Mathura Das v. Repayment not having been so made, a suit was brought in December 1896 to recover the principal sum together with interest up to the date of plaint. Held that, inasmuch as the bond contained a stipulation for the payment of interest annually and there was nothing in it to suggest that the liability should cease on the day upon which the principal was repayable, interest could be recovered. *JIVANNA PANDITHAS v. Interest post diem—Construction of bond—Damages.—On the construction of a written contract to repay in two years from its date money with interest at 15 per cent. to be paid half-yearly, arrears of interest being added half-yearly to the principal, the Judicial Committee concurred with the High Court that there was no contract to pay interest at that rate after the date fixed for repayment. Held that on that construction the creditor would be entitled on default made in the repayment to receive interest, but technically as damages assessed; and the rate prima facie would be the same as that provided by the contract during the two years, although there is no rule of law making that rate necessarily the measure of the damages. The compounding the interest after the expiration of the two years was disallowed, and an account was directed on the basis that the interest post diem should be simple, at 15 per cent. down to the date of the plaint, and after that date at 6 per cent. till payment. *CHAJMAL DAS v. Payments made by the debtor had been appropriated by the creditor to payment of the interest on the bond bearing simple interest, while the compound interest, on the other hand, had been left to accumulate. The creditor sued the representative of the debtor after his decease, to enforce the mortgage bearing compound interest. The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was in force when the suit was instituted, but not when the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties commenced. Held, assuming that a discretionary power to a Court remained under s. 209, Civil Procedure Code, to decree interest to run, at less than the contract rate, in a suit commenced before Act IV of 1882 became law, still the best guide to discretion in this case was to be found in s. 86 of that Act, which required the Courts to decree mortgage-debts with interest at the rate provided by the mortgagees (if to that rate no valid legal objection could be taken) down to the date fixed for realization. *RAMESWAR KOER V. S. 80 governs alike the case in which interest, but no rate of interest, is mentioned in the instrument, and that in which interest is not mentioned. 186. ————— Stipulation for increased interest—Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 2—Penalty.—S. 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855 is the law applicable to suits on contracts whereby interest is recoverable, and it applies to such contracts indiscriminately of the creed of the contracting parties. Where it was stipulated in a bond that, on default of the payment of the principal amount together with interest at the rate of 1½ per cent. per mensem within a certain period, interest should be payable at the rate of 6½ per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond, and that, on default of payment of such interest at the end of any six months, compound interest should be payable at the rate of 12½ per cent. per mensem, the Court, treating the rate of interest agreed to be paid on default as intended as a penalty, came to the conclusion that the rate was so high that it would not be equitable to enforce the penalty, and therefore decreed the principal amount claimed with interest at the rate of 1½ per cent. per mensem. *LACHMAN SINGH V. A 4-anna share of the profits, after deducting Government revenue and expenses, was to go in payment of interest on the money lent; half of the remaining three-fourths to go towards payment of the principal, and the other half to the defendants. If at the end of the term any balance remained due to the plaintiff, the defendants were to pay it with interest at 18 per cent. If the defendants failed to give the ijara, they agreed to pay the amount borrowed with interest at 6½ per cent. per mensem. The plaintiff advanced the money and obtained a receipt therefor from the defendants. The defendants failed in giving the plaintiff the ijara. In a suit brought to recover the sum lent by the plaintiff with interest, the first Court gave a decree for the plaintiff for the sum claimed, with interest at the higher rate stipulated for in the ikrar, viz., 75 per cent. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court the contention was raised that the rate of interest amounted to a penalty which the Court would not enforce, and that the contract was unreasonable and oppressive in character. The Judges differed in opinion, Bisom, J., holding that the contract was inequitable and oppressive, and that, notwithstanding the repeal of the usury laws by Act XXVIII of 1855, the Court was not bound to decree interest at the rate stipulated for by the parties; and MARLEY, J. (whose opinion prevailed), being of opinion that since the passing of Act XXVIII of 1855, there was no legal restriction on the rate of interest; that the stipulation for interest at 75 per cent. was not a penalty, but an alternative stipulation for interest at a higher rate on the happening of events under which the lender incurred a greater risk, and that the contract should be enforced. Held (on appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent) that the stipulation in the ikrar for interest at 75 per cent. was not in the nature of a penalty, nor was it an alternative stipulation; it was an estimate by the parties of the damages to which the plaintiff would be entitled in the event of a breach of the contract by

Installments—

Penalty—Liquidated damages.—A executed an instalment-bond for Rs. 1,000 in favour of B, in which he stipulated that from the year 1271 (1864) to 1275 (1868), both inclusive, Rs. 200 should be paid in the month of Jaishta (May 13th to June 12th) in each year, and that "in the event of any instalment being then due, all the remaining instalments should be deemed lapsed, and the principal should be paid with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per mensem, from the date of the instalment-bond." The first instalment, which fell due on the last day of Jaishta 1271 (12th June 1864) was paid only on the 18th Falgun of the same year (18th February 1865), other instalments were paid in Jaishta 1272, 1273 (1865, 1866). B accepted payment of these instalments as part payment of the principal sum due to him, and never made any demand for interest under the terms of the bond. The further instalments due in Jaishta 1274 and 1275 (May 13th to June 12th, 1867 and 1868) were never paid. On 13th Kartick 1275 (30th October 1868) B sold the bond and all his interest thereunder to C for Rs. 600. On 2nd Jaishta 1276 (14th May 1868) C brought a suit against A for the whole amount of the bond with interest thereon at 10 per cent. per mensem, from the date thereof till the date of suit, namely, Rs. 6,099, less the amount Rs. 600, which had been realized by B in the three instalments for 1271, 1272, and 1273 (1864, 1865, and 1866). The Judge awarded him only the amounts of the unpaid instalments for 1274 and 1275 (1867 and 1868), namely, Rs. 400 with interest from the date of the instalments till date of suit at one per cent. per mensem, in all Rs. 488 odd, proportionate costs and interest on all at one per cent. per mensem till date of realization. On appeal to the High Court by C, Held that the clause in the bond relied on was a mere penalty clause. 203. ————— Penalty—Rate of damages.—Where, interpreting a contract regarding the payment of interest, a Court held that the rate of interest stipulated to be paid in default of the punctual payment of the agreed interest must be regarded as a penal rate, it should have gone on to determine what reasonable damages within the stipulated rate the plaintiff was entitled to for the delay. Under the terms of a bond, dated the 18th of August 1870, the principal sum was repayable on demand, together with interest at the rate of 16½ per cent. per annum (which was payable at the end of every four months), and in default of punctual payment of the agreed interest it was repayable with interest at the rate of 36 per cent. per annum. Two instalments of interest at the rate agreed upon were paid and then default was made. The suit was instituted on the 1st of September 1873, interest from the date of the bond to the date of suit at the rate of 8 per cent. per mensem being claimed, subject to the deduction of the interest paid. Regarding the rate of interest stipulated in default as a penal rate, the Court, seeing that the debt was secured by a mortgage of property and that the rate of interest ordinarily payable was somewhat high, considered it sufficient to award the plaintiff 20 per cent. per annum, to commence from the expiry of eight months from the date of the bond. BIMARI LAL v. JUMI

[7 N. W., 106]

204. ————— Promissory note—Stipulation to pay interest at high rate on default in payment of note—Penalty—Contract Act, s. 74.—The defendant and one D, on the 6th April 1875, gave to the plaintiff, a money-lender, a promissory note, by which they jointly and severally promised to pay the plaintiff on the 6th September Rs400 "for value received in cash in hand paid on signing and delivering this bond; should we neglect or fail to pay this amount on due date, then only shall it carry interest from and on due date to date of payment at the defaulting rate of 10 per cent. per mensem." At the date of the note, the defendant and D were in the plaintiff's debt in respect of other promissory notes, and a sum of Rs100 was deducted from the amount of the note of the 6th April, in respect of one of these which was given up and in respect of interest on three others. A further sum of Rs125 was deducted as interest in advance for the five months previous to the due date of the note, and the balance (Rs175) was paid by cheque to D. D died before the note became due. In a suit brought to recover Rs400 principal, and Rs400 interest, on the promissory note, on default being made in payment.—Held this was not a case in which a certain sum was agreed to be paid on a breach of contract, and therefore s. 74 of the Contract Act did not apply. The stipulation to pay interest at the "defaulting rate" was not in the nature of a penalty. Held also that, looking at the nature of the transaction, the note contained a false statement of the consideration, which amounted only to Rs275; and there being nothing to show that the defendant understood the real nature of the transaction, the rate of interest being exorbitant and the consideration inadequate, the transaction was not one which ought to be enforced by a Court of equity. MACKINTOSH v. 205. ————— Compound interest.—Penalty.—Held that a stipulation in a bond that the interest on the principal sum lent should be paid six-monthly, and, if not paid, should be added to the principal and bear interest at the same rate, was not one of a penal nature. TEJPAL v. KRISHI SINGH . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 621

206. ————— Compound interest.—D gave M a bond for the payment of certain moneys on a certain date and for the payment of interest on such moneys at Rs1-12 per cent. per mensem, stipulating to pay the interest six-monthly, and in default "to pay compound interest in future." Held (i) that the stipulation to pay compound interest could not be regarded as a penal one, and (ii) that the bond contained an agreement to pay interest after the due date at the rate payable before that date, and that, if it had been otherwise, the obligee was entitled to interest after that date at that rate, such rate not being unreasonable. MATHURA PRASAD v. DURJAN SINGH . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 639

207. ————— High rate of interest.—Penalty.—The obligors of a bond agreed to pay the principal amount by instalments without interest, and in case of default to pay interest at the rate of Rs3-2 per cent. per mensem, and hypothecated immovable property as security for the payment of the bond-debt, sufficient for the discharge of the debt, and furnished a surety. Held by STUART, C.J., in a suit on the bond, that the principal amount being payable in the first instance without interest, the stipulation to pay interest at the rate of Rs3-2 per cent. per mensem in case of default was a penal one, and reasonable interest should only be allowed. Held by SPANKIN, J., that, looking at all the circumstances of the case, the very high rate of interest imposed in case of default should be regarded as penal, and should be reduced. The Court under the circumstances allowed interest at the rate of 1 rupee per cent. per mensem. CHUNAR MAL v. MIR

208. ————— Penalty.—The defendants, on the 8th May 1869, gave the plaintiff a bond for the payment of Rs2,000 on the 16th February 1870. This amount consisted of two items, viz., Rs1,650 principal and Rs350 interest in advance at the rate of two per cent. per mensem for the period between the date of the bond and its due date. The bond provided that, in default of payment on the due date, interest on the whole amount of Rs2,000 should be paid at the rate of two per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. Held, in a suit on the bond in which interest was claimed at the rate of two per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond, that this provision was penal, and the penalty ought not to be enforced. MASHAR ALI KHAN v. SARDAR MAL . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 709

209. ————— Penalty.—The defendant, having borrowed Rs50 from the plaintiff, gave him, on the 9th November 1878, an instrument which was in effect as follows: B (defendant) writes this rukka in favour of A (plaintiff) for Rs50, cash received, to be repaid on the 18th November 1878. In the event of default, he shall pay interest at Rs1 per diem. Held that, looking to the whole instrument, it was equitable to hold that the term "interest" was not intended to mean interest in the strict sense of that term, but a penalty, and the amount of interest should be so treated, and a reasonable amount only be allowed. The observations of PONTREX, J., in Bickook Nath Pandey v. Ram Lockun Singh, 11 B. L. R. 135, concurred in. HANSEIDHAR v. BU ALI KHAN

[I. L. R., 3 All., 260]

210. ————— Penalty.—A bond for the repayment of money lent provided that such money should be repaid on a certain date; that interest at the rate of Rs7-8-0 per cent. per annum should be paid at the end of every year; and that, if default were made in the payment of interest, such money should be repaid with interest at the rate of Rs7-8-0 per cent. per annum. The bond contained an hypothecation of immovable property as collateral security. In a suit on the bond the obligee, the obligor having failed to pay any interest, claimed interest from the date the bond became due to the date of institution of the suit at Rs7-8-0, the defaulting rate. Held, following the principle laid down in Bansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan, I. L. R., 3 All., 260, that the provisions of the bond, as regards the rate of interest payable on default of the payment of interest, were in their nature penal and so excessive that, as a matter of equity, they should not be enforced. Held also, with reference to the question what was a reasonable amount of compensation for the obligor to pay for breach of contract, that unpaid interest should bear interest at the rate of Rs1-4-0 per cent. per annum from the date of default to the date of the High Court's decree. KHURRAM SINGH v. BHAWANI BAKSH

211. ————— Penalty.—Equitable relief.—By a registered bond for Rs4,603, dated the 4th October 1876, in which immovable property was hypothecated as collateral security, it was provided that the obligor should pay interest at the rate of Rs1-4-0 per cent. per mensem at the end of every six months, and upon default in the payment of such interest, that he should pay interest at the rate of Rs3 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. The bond also contained a stipulation against alienation, and declared that the principal sum was payable on demand. The obligee sued the obligor upon the bond, claiming to recover the principal sum and interest from the date of the bond for three years eleven months and twenty days, less different sums amounting to Rs. 1,600 paid from time to time on account, at the defaulting rate of Rs. 12 per cent. Held that, having regard to the fact that the security of property was given for the loan and the obligor contracted not to alienate the property, the defaulting rate of interest provided by the bond was of a penal character, relating as it did not only to the interest due on and subsequent to the default, but retrospectively to the date of the bond itself, and should not be awarded, but that reasonable compensation only should be awarded for the obligor's breach of contract in respect of interest. Accordingly the Court made a decree, giving the obligee interest on the principal sum, from the date of the bond to the date of the decree, at Rs. 4-0 per cent. per mensem, and compound interest from the date of default in the payment of interest to the date of the decree, at the rate of four annas per cent. per mensem, by way of damages for such default. *Bansidhar v. 212. Penalty.—By a deed of mortgage the defendant agreed to pay interest at the rate of one pice per rupee per mensem, and it was provided that the mortgage was to remain in possession for a period of 25 years in lieu of principal and interest, and that the mortgagor was not to claim the property back unless he paid the principal and interest that might accrue due in 25 years from the date of the bond. Held that the clause in the mortgage-deed as to payment of 25 years' interest was not a penalty. *Bajaji Balal v. I. L. R., 6 Bom., 490

213. Penalty.—The obligor of a bond agreed that, if the principal amount were not paid at the end of 12 months with the interest thereon, such interest should be added to the principal, which together should represent the principal sum, until a further year's interest at the original rate had accrued, when the same process should be followed of adding unpaid interest to the principal, and so on until the debt was liquidated. Held that the stipulation as to the annual capitalization of principal and interest, for the purpose of carrying interest, could not be regarded as removing the transaction from the region of an ordinary contract on a bond under which an obligor was bound by the terms to which he had agreed. Sarju Prasad v. Beni Madho

214. Penalty.—The obligor of a bond promised therein to pay the amount on a certain day without interest, and if he made default, to pay the amount with interest at the rate of Rs. 12 per cent. per mensem. Held, in a suit on the bond, that such interest was not penal in its character, but contract interest, the liability to pay

215. Solamamah payable by instalments—Penalty.—A decree was passed on a solamamah, by the terms of which a sum of two lakhs of rupees, declared to be due to the plaintiff from the defendant, was to be paid by yearly instalments of Rs. 20,000 each. But if at any time two instalments should be due at the same time, the whole debt should be recoverable forthwith, with interest calculated at 12 per cent. instead of 6 per cent. otherwise payable. Held that the condition whereby the amount of interest payable should be increased in default in due payment as above being made must be looked upon as part of the decree of the Court, and not as a penalty. *Bickook Nath Pandey v. 216. Compensation for breach of contract—Contract Act, s. 74.—V lent Rs. 1,500 to C and the members of his family under a bond, by which it was agreed that C's family should demise certain land on kanom to V and receive a further sum. It was also stipulated in the bond that C and the members of his family should pay interest at 6 per cent. upon Rs. 1,500 until the execution of the kanom deed, and interest at 24 per cent. from the date of the loan in the event of their not making the demise. The demise was not made. Held that the stipulation for the enhanced rate of interest did not create an independent obligation, and that the proper course was to determine what would be a sufficient compensation for the breach of contract. *Vengideswara Putter v. under the accounts: in the event of non-payment every six months, I will pay the interest at the rate of one rupee eight annas per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond." Held by STUART, C.J., that the stipulation to pay the higher rate of interest in case of non-payment of interest at the lower rate was a stipulation in the nature of a penalty, and should be so treated in the accounts to be taken. Bickook Nath Panday v. Ram Lochan Singh, 11 B. L. R., 186, referred to. Kharag Singh v. Bhola Nath, I. L. R., 4 All., 8, observed on. Held that the increased rate of interest, being made payable from the date of the bond, and not only from the breach of the contract, must be taken to be in the nature of a penalty, and only to be taken into consideration as a basis upon which damages for the breach of contract were to be estimated. Penalty—Bond.

The lender of money, for the use of which interest is to be paid, may, at the time of making the loan, protect himself against breach of the borrower's contract to pay the interest when due, either by a stipulation that in case of such breach he shall be entitled to recover compound interest or by a stipulation that, in such a case, the rate of interest shall be increased. But a condition that, upon failure by the borrower to pay the interest when due, both compound interest and an increased rate shall be payable, amounts to a penalty, inasmuch as the two stipulations together cannot be regarded as a fair agreement with reference to the loss sustained by the lender. In a bond, dated in February 1877, for a sum of money payable in June 1882, it was provided that interest should be paid at the rate of Rs. 9 per cent. per annum on the puranmashi of every Jaith, and that, if the interest were not duly paid, the rate should be increased to Rs. 15 per cent. per annum, and compound interest should be payable. There was no provision for payment of interest from the time when the principal became due. In December 1884, the obligee brought a suit on the bond against the obligor, claiming interest from the date of the bond to the date of the institution of the suit at Rs15 per annum, and compound interest for the same period at the same rate. Held that the stipulations contained in the bond must be regarded as penal, and it was therefore the Court's duty to limit the penalty to what was the real amount of damage sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's breach of the contract to pay the interest at the due date. Held that for this purpose the proper course was to reduce the interest to Rs9 per cent. per annum, reckoned at compound interest, with yearly rests, to the due date of the bond; and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was to blame for not having enforced his remedy at an earlier date, he should only recover simple interest at Rs9 per cent. from the due date of payment, upon the entire sum which was due when the bond became due, i.e., the principal added to the compound interest calculated at Rs9 per cent. The same obligee held another bond executed by the same obligors in June 1879 for a sum of money payable in June 1882, with interest at Rs9 per cent. per annum. There was a provision in the bond that, if the principal and interest were not paid on the due date, the obligee should be entitled to recover the principal with interest at the rate of Rs24 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond. In December 1884, the obligee brought a suit on the bond against the obligor claiming interest on the principal amount from its date to the date of the institution of the suit at the rate of Rs24 per cent. per annum. Held that the increased rate of interest might fairly be considered as representing the damages sustained by the lender by reason of the borrower's failure to pay interest at the specified time, and should therefore be paid down to the due date of the bond; and that, as the plaintiff failed to enforce payment for a long time, the interest from the due date might fairly revert to the old rate of Rs9 per cent. per annum, and the amount should be calculated from that date, on that basis, on the whole amount of principal and interest then due on the bond. DIP NARAIN RAI v. Higher rate of interest upon default in payment of instalment.—A decree, of which the terms had been arranged by a soleamsh between the parties, for payment of money by instalments with interest at six per cent., was construed to provide also for three contingencies, viz., non-payment at due date (a) of the first instalment, two consecutive instalments being in arrear at the same time; (b) of instalments, other than the first; (c) of the first instalment, simply. Upon the occurrence of (a) or of (b), execution might issue for the whole decretal money with interest thereon at twelve per cent. Upon the occurrence of (c), execution might issue for that instalment, with interest at twelve per cent from the date of the decree. Held that these provisions for double interest

Liquidated damages.—Where a document contains covenants for the performance of several things, and then one large sum is stated to be payable in the event of a breach, such sum must be considered a penalty; but when it is agreed that if a party do, or refrain from doing, any particular thing, a certain sum shall be paid by him, then the sum stated may be treated as liquidated damages. A bond for Rs20,000 which provided for payment of interest at the rate of Rs1-4 per cent. per month contained the following clause: "We hereby promise and give in writing that we shall pay year by year a sum of Rs3,000 on account of the interest And in case of our failing to pay year by year the said sum of Rs3,000, the same shall be considered as principal, and thereon interest shall run also at the rate of Rs1-4 per cent. per month." Held that the clause was not penal, but in the nature of an agreement to pay liquidated damages, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due on the bond with interest as agreed upon. HEMANT LALL DAS v. Rum Bahadur Singh, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 805, that the stipulation as to the payment of interest at the higher rate was not in the nature of a penalty, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due on the bond with interest at the increased rate from the date of the bond; and that, whether the interest at the increased rate, in case of non-payment on the date fixed in the contract, was payable from the commencement of the loan or from the date fixed for the repayment of the loan, s. 74 of the Contract Act was not applicable. Mackintosh v. Default was made when the first and second payment of interest became due. After the second payment had become due, the creditor accepted payment on account of interest of a sum a little more than the arrears calculated at 9 per cent. In a suit by the creditor.—Held (1) that the plaintiff had not waived any right under the bond by accepting the payment on account of interest; (2) that the provision for enhanced interest calculated from the date of the bond on default was of the

s. 74—Bond—Breach of contract—Penalty.—A bond by which immovable property was hypothecated provided for interest at 12½ per cent. and contained a condition that, if the principal with interest were not paid within one year, 27 per cent. should be paid as interest as from the date of the bond. Held that the question to be determined with reference to this condition was whether the parties intended to contract that, on failure by the mortgagor to pay within the stipulated time, 27 per cent. should be payable quod interest from the date of the bond or whether they intended that the condition should be regarded merely as providing for a penalty, leaving the amount of compensation for non-payment at the stipulated time to be determined, in case of dispute, by the Court. Held that the condition would not in itself be an unreasonable one under the circumstances, that the parties contracted that the 27 per cent. should be payable quod interest, and that interest at that rate must therefore be allowed. Wallis v. Smith, L. R., 21 Ch. D., 243, referred to. BANWARI DAS v. MUHAMMAD MASHTAT I. L. R., 9 All., 690

235.Unconscionable bargain—Bond—Compound interest.

—In a suit for the recovery of a principal sum of Rs 99 due upon a bond, with compound interest at two per cent. per mensem, it was found that advantage was taken by the plaintiff of the fact that the defendant was being pressed in the tahsil for immediate payment of revenue due, to induce him to execute the bond charging compound interest at the above-mentioned rate, notwithstanding that ample security was given by mortgage of landed property. It was also found that although, under the terms of the bond, the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied, in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one, which the Court had undoubted power to refuse to enforce, and which, under all the circumstances, it would be unreasonable and inequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to; and that, under the circumstances, compound interest should not be allowed. Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v. Crow, which regards the interest at the increased rate as a penalty, is correct as to the claim of interest up to the stipulated day of repayment, and Baij Nath Singh v. Shah Ali Hosain was wrongly decided as to this point. S. 74 of the Contract Act applies only to that part of the claim for interest which is in respect of the period from the date of the bond to the due date, and has no application to the claim for interest for the period from the due date to the date of realization. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the higher rate of interest, it being in the nature of a penalty within the meaning of s. 74 of the Contract Act: *Kala Chand Kyal v. Shib Chunder Roy, I. No payment had been made on account of principal or interest. Held that the enhanced rate of interest was a penalty under s. 74 of the Contract Act, and therefore was not recoverable, but that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the principal, together with interest calculated at 21 per cent. up to the dates when the instalments respectively became due, and at 12 per cent. from those dates to the date of the plaint and at 6 per cent. from that date until payment. *Nanjappa v. In a suit upon the bond interest was claimed at the higher rate from the date of default to the date of realization. Held that it is open to the Court to decide, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, whether the stipulation as to the enhanced interest was agreed upon as interest properly so called, or as a penalty, and whether in the circumstances of the case the debtor was entitled to equitable relief. *Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Held upon a construction of the bond that there was a stipulation to pay the interest on the defaulted instalments from the date of the loan, and it was a penalty falling under s. 74 of the Contract Act, which could not be enforced. Mackintosh v. Crow, I. L. R., 9 Cal., 689; Kalachand Kyal v. Shib Chunder Roy, I. L. R., 19 Cal., 392; Baid Nath Das v. Shamanand Das, I. L. R., 22 Cal., 143; *Nanjappa v. Nanjappa, I. L. Held further that, even if the said stipulation in the bond did not amount to a penalty under s. 74 of the Contract Act, and although under the provisions of s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, a man was free to contract interest at any rate that he chose on the borrowed money and nothing prevented him from agreeing to pay it from any time either prospective or retrospective, yet the only question that would arise in a case like the present was whether a Court of equity was precluded by that Act from affording relief independently of s. 74 of the Contract Act, and that, notwithstanding the provisions of Act XXVIII of 1855, a Court of equity could see whether the provision as to enhanced interest was agreed upon as interest, or whether it was intended to be a penalty upon the principles of equity and good conscience, and that in this case the stipulation

"On account of interest of the said sum of money, you shall take the profits of 1/2 anna lauda, and I will pay Rs 20 per annum as the balance of interest from year to year by getting the said amount endorsed on the back of this document; and if I fail to do so, then at the end of the year the said amount of interest shall be added to the principal; and for the total amount, whatever it will be, I will pay up to the date of repayment at the rate of half anna per rupee per mensem." Held that, inasmuch as what was specified in the contract was only the enhanced rate of interest, but no definite amount was specified as being payable in the event of a breach, nor could it be said that the amount, though not expressly stated in definite terms, was an ascertainable and definite amount which could become payable at the date of the breach, the stipulation for the payment of enhanced interest did not come within the scope of s. 74 of the Contract Act. *Mackintosh v. unequal and oppressive bargains as no man of ordinary prudence would enter into, and which, from their nature and the relative position of the parties, raise the presumption of fraud or undue influence. The principles upon which such relief is granted apply to contracts in which exceedingly onerous conditions are imposed by money-lenders upon poor and ignorant persons in rural districts. The exercise of such power has not been affected by the repeal of the usury laws. Chesterfield v. Jansson, 2 Ves., 165; O'Rourke v. Bolingbroke, 1. R., 2 App. Cas., 514; *Earl of Aylesford v. An illiterate kurmi in the position of a peasant proprietor executed a mortgage-deed in favour of a professional money-lender to whom he owed Rs 97 by which he agreed to pay interest on that sum at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum at compound interest. He further agreed that "dharta" or a yearly fine, at the rate of one anna per rupee, should be allowed to the mortgagee, to be calculated by yearly rests. It was also provided that the interest should be paid from the profits of certain malikana land of the mortgagor, and that, if the interest were not paid for two years, the mortgagee should be put in possession of this land. As security for the debt, a six pie zamindari share was mortgaged for a term of eleven years. The effect of the stipulation as to "dharta" was that one anna per rupee would be added at the end of every year, not only to the principal mortgage-money, but also to the interest due, and the total would be again regarded as the principal sum for the ensuing year. Ten years after the date of the mortgage, the mortgagor brought a suit for redemption on payment of only Rs 97 or such sum as the Court might determine as due to the mortgage. At that time the accounts made up by the mortgagee showed that the debt of Rs 97 with compound interest had swollen to Rs 78, of which the "dharta" alone amounted to Rs 11. Held that the stipulation in the deed as to "dharta" was not of the kind referred to in s. 74 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that there was no question of penalty, but that, looking to the relative positions of the parties and the unconscionable and oppressive nature of the stipulation, the benefit thereof should be disallowed to the mortgagee, and the mortgagor permitted to redeem on payment of the mortgage-money and interest, on appeal having been preferred by him from the decree of the first Court making redemption subject to payment of interest. LALJI v. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, S, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent F, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May F requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E D S & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by K for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit, praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage, and demurrage, and their costs of suit. Held (1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs; (2) that S, the fourth defendant, was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charge for freight and costs; (3) that the plaintiffs' charges for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession, not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. All that they could presumably be entitled to was a reasonable warehouse rent, which, however, they had not claimed. BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY Co. v. SASSOON. I. L. R., 18 Bom., 231

The former question, if replied to, would only be of value as the opinion of a party to suit on what is really a question of law. Under the Civil Procedure Code, interrogatories for the purpose of eliciting facts bearing upon issues arising in a suit are limited in operation and are not permissible in cases where the procedure provided by s. 184 of the Code is applicable. *Ali Kader Syud Hossain Ali v. 1. FRAMING AND SETTLING ISSUES.

1. Mode of framing issues—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 139.—*Seemle—*Under s. 139 of Act VIII of 1859, the issues were to be framed upon the plaint, written statements, and allegations of the parties or their counsel. MACKINTOSH v. TEMPLE 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 333

2. Plaint—Written and oral statements.—The issues are to be framed from all questions of law or fact upon which the parties may be at issue, and are to be collected, not merely from the plaint, nor from the written statements, but may also be taken from the oral statements of their pleaders. KOWSULLYA DOSSIE v. RAM JUGGVENATH DEY SIRCAR . 8 W. R., 162

MAN GOBIND SIRCAR v. UMBIKA MONER DOSSIA
[16 W. R., 216]

3. Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 139.—Plaint—Written and oral statements.—Under s. 139, Act VIII of 1859, the Court may frame the issues from the oral examination of the parties or their pleaders, notwithstanding any difference between the allegations of fact contained in those examinations and the allegations contained in the written statements. SHAHB-ZADI BROUM v. HINMAT BANADIR

[4 B. L. R., A. C., 108; 12 W. R., 512]

4. Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 139.—A Court cannot refuse to enquire into a plea set up by a plaintiff's pleaders in reply to questions put them by the Court, although such plea was not advanced in the original plaint. S. 139, Code of Civil Procedure, authorized a Court to frame issues on allegations collected from the oral examination of parties or their pleaders, notwithstanding discrepancy between those allegations and the written pleadings. KOBERBOODEN AHMED v. NYAN BIBER
[8 W. R., 354]

5. Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 147.—A Court in framing issues is not bound down to the language of the plaint and written statement, but may frame them not only from the pleadings, but also from the statements of the parties and their pleaders made before the Court. MAHOMED MAHMOOD v. SAFAR ALI

[I. L. R., 11 Cal., 407]

6. Settlement of issues—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 139.—Issues are to be fixed under s. 139, Code of Civil Procedure, when both parties appear, and the Court can ascertain from them what are the points upon which they are at issue. The Court is not bound to fix any issue when the defendant does not appear, but ought to proceed under s. 111 to hear the case ex-parte. AMIR ALI SOWDAGUR v. IMAMOODDIN . 15 W. R., 145

7. Form of issues requisite for trial.—The issues should raise matters fairly in controversy between the parties, even though the pleadings may be defectively drawn. CANNAMMAL AYAIR v. VIJAYA RAGUNADA RANGA SAMY SINGAPULLIAN . 8 Mad., 114

8. Nature of issues requisite for trial.—It may be laid down as a general rule that only such averments should be made the subject of issues as are essential to support the cause of action and are denied by the defendant, or as are essential to support a plea and are denied by the plaintiff. Mere pieces of evidence which are to be adduced to enable the Court to infer the truth of a material averment, ought not to be made the subject of a separate issue; nor should the motives of the plaintiff in bringing the suit be put in issue; for if he have a good cause of action, his motives, as ill-will, pique, etc., would not be an answer to it. BIRCH v. FURZIND ALI

[3 N. W., 308]

9. Duty of Court.—The duty of a Judge in clearly ascertaining the real points in dispute, and framing issues accordingly, pointed out. APAYA v. RAMA

[I. L. R., 3 Bom., 210]

10. Suit against minor—Issue not founded on plaintiff's affirmative statements.—In a suit by a person claiming as the ultimate heir in reversion to the estate of a deceased widow, it was held that the plaintiff was bound, before he could be allowed to succeed against the minor in possession, to pledge himself to a specific case and to prove that case, and the lower Court was held to have done wrong in raising an issue which was not based and moulded upon some specific affirmative allegation made as part of the plaintiff's case, thus putting the minor to the peril of such an issue merely on a general negative statement made by his guardian. JUGDEEP NARAIN SAHNI v. COURT OF WARDS

[22 W. R., 460]

11. Suit for possession under deed of sale—Issues to be raised—Proof of title.—In a suit to recover possession based on a deed of sale, Held that the Court should have raised issues as to ownership and possession, as, even if the sale-deed were not proved, the plaintiff might have been able to substantiate a title independently of it. GOVIND v. VITHAL

[I. L. R., 20 Bom., 753]

12. Raising issue on clear point of law.—There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which imposes upon the Judge the duty of allowing an issue to be raised on a point of law which he considers to be perfectly clear. IMPERIAL BANKING AND TRADING CO. v. PRANJIVANDAS HARIVANDAS . 2 Bom., 272; 2nd Ed., 258

ISSUES—continued.1. FRAMING AND SETTLING ISSUES

13. — Inconsistent issues—Undue influence—Trial of issues.—The execution of a hishnamma having been denied by the plaintiff, a Mahomedan widow and purda-nashin, in a suit brought by her to have it set aside as fabricated, she also alleged that undue influence had been exercised upon her. It was decided upon the evidence that the instrument was genuine, having been executed by her of own free will. The above questions being inconsistent with one another, the latter should not have been admitted to form part of an issue together with the former. On an issue of undue influence, rightly raised, a Court should consider whether the gift in question (a) is one which a right-minded person might be expected to make; (b) is or is not an improvident act on the donor's part; (c) is such as to have required advice, if not obtained by the donor; and (d) whether the intention to make the gift originated with the donor, the principles being always the same, although the circumstances may differ. MAHOMED BUKSH KHAN v. HOSSAIN BISHI I. L. R., 15 Calo., 684
[L. R., 15 L. A., 81]

2. FRESH OR ADDITIONAL ISSUES.

14. — Raising issues not raised in pleadings—Proceedings against policy or morality.—Although a Court may have the right, and is perhaps even under an obligation, to take cognizance motu proprio of any objection manifestly apparent on the face of a proceeding showing that it is against morality or public policy, yet where this is only to be collected from the evidence by inference and is capable of explanation or answer by counter-evidence, it is highly inconvenient, and may lead to the most direct injustice, to enter into the enquiry if the issue has not been presented by the pleadings or the points recorded for proof. FISCHER v. KAMALA NAIKER

[3 W. R., P. C., 38; 8 Moore's L. A., 170]

15. — Question raised at hearing of suit.—Held that the Court was not on its own motion competent to determine a question which was not alleged, nor raised by the pleadings of the parties. But if the question was raised even on the day of the hearing of the case at any time before the decision of the case, the Court ought not to have rejected it, because it was not raised by the written statement, but ought to have framed issues to determine the question. DYASHUNKEE v. MAHOMED AMREEN-OD-DEEN KHAN 3 Agra, 246

16. — Suit for pre-emption.—When the plaintiff claimed pre-emption on one ground, and the Court raised an issue as to his right on another ground, to which the parties assented, and the case was decided against him as he had not proved his right on that ground.—Held the Court would not interfere with the finding on special appeal. SHEW SIKROY LALL v. 17. — Suit on mortgage—Validity of mortgage.—Where a plaintiff fails to show that a mortgage, created by certain persons as executrix and executors of a Hindu will, has been validly created by them in that capacity, the Court will, unless it is manifestly inequitable to do so, allow him to raise an issue that the mortgage was validly created by the parties in another character. NILKANT CHATTERJEE v. 18. — Suit for declaration of title.—On the evidence, the defendant wished to raise issues as to the unchastity and inability of the plaintiff to succeed, and as to her suing on behalf of another person, not having alleged that she was doing so, neither of which matters were referred to in his written statement; but leave to raise them was refused, and the Court held that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances of the case, entitled to rely on the title given her by the production of the title-deeds in her favour. SWARNAMAYI RAUT v. 19. — Suit as heir of adopted son.—Where the son of the son first adopted sued as heir of the second adopted son to obtain the property left by him, and the suit throughout was contested with respect to his claim as heir of that second adopted son.—Held the plaintiff could not, on appeal, shift his ground and regard the second adopted son as a trespasser, and seek to recover the property on the ground of its having belonged to the ancestor. GOPES LOLL v. 21. — Amendment of plaint—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 139-141.—In 1817, the ancestor of the plaintiffs had obtained from the zamindar a maumai istemrari lease of a certain portion of his property. In 1837, the entire zamindari was put up to sale for arrears of Government revenue, and was purchased by Government as the highest bidder, who thereupon granted a lease for a term of twenty years to W. This revenue sale was never set aside; but in 1842 the Government restored the estate to the Rajah zamindar with all the prior incumbrances, but subject to his confirming the lease to W. In 1844, the father of the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of their tenure, but the suit was dismissed by the Principal Sudder Ameer on the ground that the right to sue had not accrued, and could only arise on the expiration of the lease to W. This judgment was reversed by the Sudder

Dewany Adawlut, but was restored and affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee. In the meantime, and before the expiry of the lease to W, owing to certain fraudulent transactions on the part of A, who had got into possession of the estate as the purchaser of the interests of certain mortgagees of the Rajah, the property was again put up to sale for arrears of Government revenue, and was purchased by M, a party to the transactions abovementioned. The Rajah, however, succeeded in getting this sale reversed in 1866, and obtained possession of his estate in 1871. In a suit, instituted on the 23rd October 1878, against the Rajah and certain other parties to whom he had granted a patti lease, the plaintiffs alleged that the sale of 1837 was set aside by Government as illegal, and that consequently their tenure had revived; that the effect of the Principal Sudder Ameen's decision, confirmed by the Privy Council, was to postpone their right to obtain possession of their tenure, until after the expiration of the lease to W; that when that lease expired, the property was in the possession of M, of the fraudulent character of whose title they had no knowledge; and that their right to sue in the present case consequently arose only in 1871. The defence was that the plaintiff disclosed no cause of action; that the cause of action, if any, was barred by the law of limitation; and that the tenure was destroyed by the proceedings connected with the sale in 1837, which was never set aside. The Judge held that the plaintiff disclosed a cause of action which arose in 1837, and that the suit was consequently barred. He accordingly dismissed the suit without taking any evidence. On appeal to the High Court, it was admitted on the part of the plaintiffs that the sale of 1837 was never set aside; but it was contended that the restoration of the zamindari to the zamindar, "with all the former incumbrances," gave rise to an equity of a personal character against the Rajah, and those taking under him with notice of the plaintiffs' title, to restore the plaintiffs' tenure, which equity fastened upon him on his obtaining actual possession of the estate; and that therefore the cause of action accrued only in 1871. On the part of the defendants it was objected that the plaintiffs had no right to make a new case in appeal, and inasmuch as the equity, which was now sought to be fastened on the zamindar, was never raised in the pleadings, it could not now be set up. Held that, under ss. 139 and 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs might be allowed to amend their case in any stage before a final decision; and inasmuch as, if the plaintiffs' case as so amended were proved, the suit would not be barred, it was necessary for the determination of the question of limitation that the case should be remanded to the lower Court for trial. BAMDOTAL KHAN v. which does not strictly come within the proper scope of the pleadings. The power to allow such amendments is given by the first part of s. 149 of Act X of 1877 corresponding with the first part of s. 141 of Act VIII of 1859. NEHOMA ROY v. RADHA PERBHAD SINGH

23. — Issue raised by Court which was not raised by parties.—The plaintiffs in a suit denounced in the plaint their two signatures to a sale-deed as forgeries, and never alleged that they witnessed it under pressure. The Court of first instance found them to be genuine, and the lower Appellate Court, while agreeing with the Court below in its findings upon the question of the genuineness of the signatures, observed that they were obtained under pressure, and so reversed the decree of the Court below. On second appeal to the High Court,—Held that Courts are not to raise an important and serious issue in a case for the parties when they have not raised it themselves by their own pleadings in the cause. WALIULLAH KHAN v. MUHAMMAD ISHARULLAH KHAN

[I. L. R., 10 All., 627]

24. — Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 149—Court's authority to frame new issues—Amendment of plaint.—A Court is not authorized by s. 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to frame new issues which have the effect of altering the nature of the suit. A Court's power of raising additional issues is co-extensive with its power of amending plaints and is subject to the same restrictions. The plaintiff originally sued the defendant as a trespasser, claiming damages for wrongful occupation and for injury done to the land in dispute. Some time after the issues had been framed, the plaintiff applied for an amendment of the plaint and sought to recover rent for the land in suit on the basis of a subsisting tenancy. The Subordinate Judge, without making the amendment, framed two additional issues, viz., (1) whether the suit was based on the relation of landlord and tenant, and (2) whether the thikans in dispute were let to the defendant, and what rent the plaintiff was entitled to recover in respect of the same. The Subordinate Judge found on these issues that the tenancy was still subsisting, and passed a decree for the rent claimed. Held that the Subordinate Judge had no authority, under s. 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), to frame the new issues. NARAYAN GANESH v. HARI GANESH elapsed, during the minority of the son, against whom, on his attaining full age, this suit was brought by the lessor to recover three years' rent of the renewed ijara. The contract of the adoptive mother and guardian was not personally binding upon the adopted son, and had not been ratified by him after attaining full age. It did not purport to deal with the estate to which he afterwards succeeded, but was entered into by the managers in their own names. Held that the case, as originally made in the plaint and raised by the issues framed in the Court of first instance, which covered a wider ground, viz., that the son was personally bound by the contract as being beneficial to him, and on the ground that he had ratified it after attaining full age, could not be altered in appeal into what would be a wholly different claim and raise entirely new issues, viz., that the managers, having power under the will, had charged the estate with the rent of the ijara, and that such charge remained upon it in the possession of the heir, who was liable to the extent of the assets received by him. The latter would have been in fact a new suit. Held also that the suit, even if treated as one against the respondent in regard to the estate, could not be sustained. The case that arose in Hannomanpersaud Panday v. Munraj Koonwarree, 6 Moore's I. A., 393, distinguished. INDUR CHUNDER SINGH v. RADHA KISHORE GHOSH . . . I. L. R., 19 Cal., 507 [I. L. R., 19 I. 26. ——— Civil Procedure Code, ss. 566, 567—Framing a new issue by the Appellate Court—Evidence recorded in one suit admitted by consent at the hearing of another—Appellate Court, Power of.—In the Court of first instance the appellant, upon the title of a sister's son, was one of the plaintiffs who obtained a decree for an inheritance, the suit having been heard at the same time with another, in which relations of the deceased owner, alleging themselves to be of the same gotra with him, also obtained a decree as his heirs. Evidence in the latter suit was received in that of the appellant by consent of parties, both suits having been brought against the same defendant, whose title as widow of a son alleged to have been adopted by the last owner was set up in both, but was not proved. Appeals having been filed in both suits, in that brought by the sister's son a new issue was framed by the Appellate Court, under s. 566, Civil Procedure Code, as to whether he was entitled as nearest of kin, or was excluded by the other claimants, whose suit was, at that time, compromised. Held that after what had taken place in regard to both suits the Appellate Court could frame this issue, although it was new, and had not been raised by the defendant's written answer. With reference to the evidence in the one suit having been imported as a whole into the other at the first hearing, and the admission of evidence upon the trial of the new issue, it was held that the parties intended that the evidence should be admitted and that no irregularity had taken place materially affecting the decree of the

29. ——— Fresh issue—Raising fresh issue on alternative plea.—Where, from the way in which the issues were framed and the pleadings worded, it was clear that there was no contention on the part of the defendant as to whether the terms of the deed on which the suit was based had been strictly complied with or not, but the factum of the deed itself was only put in issue by the defendant, Held that this was not a case in which the defendant was entitled to fall back upon an alternative plea and raise the question of compliance. *SHUBOCHUNDER DASER v. Where a Munsif rejected such application and decreed the case, and it appeared to the Judge on appeal that the evidence on the record was sufficient to determine the question.—Held that the lower Appellate Court was right in giving effect to the defence. BOLYE MEAH v. 39. ————— Production of evidence on appeal.—Where a quite new and different issue is raised in the Appellate Court, it ought to be done in such a way as to give the parties the fullest opportunity of producing evidence upon it, because if it is at all likely that in consequence of the issues framed in the first Court the parties were induced to abstain from giving evidence, it would not be right to decide the issues against them on account of the absence of evidence. LATOO MUNDLE v. of hearing, after both parties and several of the witnesses had been examined in respect of the issues originally recorded; and the Collector, without adjourning the case for trial upon such issue, having examined two witnesses who remained for examination, gave judgment in the case. Held that, under s. 65 of Act X of 1859, the case ought to have been adjourned, and a convenient day fixed for trial upon the new issue. N C A, who claimed under a mukariri title, and alleged that he was in receipt of the rents from the raiyats, was made a party under s. 78, Act VIII of 1859. The Munsif passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, which, on appeal by N C A, was reversed and the suit dismissed. Held, on appeal to the High Court, the only issue to be tried was whether the relation of landlord and tenant subsisted between D C S and B. DAYAL CHAND SAHAY v. in general terms.—The issues should not be in too general terms, and should, if possible, embrace the whole matter in dispute. The plaintiffs, the cultivators of certain lands yielding rent to a pagoda, of which the first defendant was the recently-appointed dharmakarta, claimed to be declared proprietors of the said lands, to be exempted from the payment of rent, at the rate of two-thirds of the gross produce to be declared liable to pay a certain lower rent set forth in the plaint, and to obtain a refund of the amount paid under an order of the Sub-Collector in 1853 passed without jurisdiction in excess of the rent justly payable. The issue given by the Principal Sudder Ameen was "whether the first defendant is entitled to rent at the rate specified in document A." Held that this issue was too general and only embraced a part of the matter in dispute, and the issue "what is a fair and reasonable rate of rent" directed to be sent down to the lower Court. KUTTY SUBBAMANAYA v. 47. ——— Suit by tenant for possession after alleged illegal ejectment—Question of right of occupancy.—The question of a prescriptive right of occupancy cannot arise as an issue in a case where a tenant sues to recover possession of land from which he alleges he has been illegally ejected. The tenant might have been in lawful possession only six weeks, and yet his eviction might have been illegal, and he would be entitled to recover. BAHADOOR ALLY v. DOMUN SINGH

48. ——— Issue raised between co-defendants—Validity of will.—One of the defendants to a suit having relied on the validity of a hibbanamah and a will, the former of which was alone contested below by the plaintiff, the lower Court was right in not trying the issue as to the will, which was one raised between co-defendants. BRUWAN CHUNDER BANERJEE v. 49. ——— Issues raised in suit for kabuliati with intervenor.—In a suit for a kabuliati of twenty-five parcels of land, where the defendant alleged that he only held three, and that he was not the tenant of the plaintiff, but of a third party who intervened claiming the land as included in his half share of a part of a talukh as being the person in receipt of the rents, the lower Appellate Court declared that, as neither party had given any conclusive evidence of actual possession and as the raiyat's holding had been found to appertain to the half share of which the intervenor had proved possession, the plaintiff was entitled to a kabuliati for a moiety of the plots held by the defendant. Held that the raiyat was entitled to be heard whether he paid the rents to the plaintiff and whether he was bound to give the kabuliati asked for, and plaintiff was entitled to be heard whether the raiyat held three parcels or twenty-five. RADHAKISHORE TALWANDAR v. decree for possession, and sold to W. W's intervention having failed in a suit for arrears of rent by a party setting up a title intermediate between him and the raiyat on the ground of a miras pottah obtained from the mortgagor subsequently to the mortgage, he (W) sued to have his right declared to the rents payable by that raiyat. The suit was dismissed on certain issues in the Court of first instance, but decreed in appeal on the single issue as to the pottah having been granted subsequent to the condition-sale. Held that this issue arose legitimately, and was one within the lower Appellate Court's discretion to allow and within its jurisdiction to determine. GOBIND CHUNDER BANERJEE v. WISE

[12 W. R., 19]

51. ——— Suit for land forming endowed property—Validity of grant—Limitation.—A suit for a portion of land granted in trust for purposes connected with the preservation of a Mahomedan saint's tomb, where plaintiff claimed as son of the last mutwallee, on the allegation that he (plaintiff) had been dispossessed during his minority, defendant's case being that the grant had never been in the possession of mutwallees, but had been divided among the original grantee's heirs, from one of whom the portion in dispute had come into the possession of his (defendant's) vendor. Held that the material point to try was whether plaintiff's ancestors had from the time of the grant been in possession, or whether the land had been inherited according to the ordinary rules of Mahomedan inheritance by the heirs of the grantees. Held that on the question of limitation it was for the Judge to find whether plaintiff's father had been in possession within time. RASUL ALI v. ABBOTT

[12 W. R., 132]

52. ——— Suit for damages for ejectment.—In a suit by a lessee to recover a sum on account of dispossession on the allegation that his lessors had fraudulently given a second lease to another party, and that with the exception of a specified sum collected by himself the remaining collections for the year had been made by the lessors, and that he was entitled to recover those collections. Held, with reference to the footing on which the plaintiff sued, that it was not for the Judge to assess damages, but to find on the allegation that the lessors had collected the year's rents with the exception of a given sum. GOBIND CHUND JUTTER v. 53. ——— Suit for ejectment—Issue as to wrongful possession of defendants.—Where certain samindars sued to recover khas possession of certain shares of land, alleging that defendants were wrongfully in possession, it was held that, though bound to prove their right to khas possession, yet whether they proved themselves to have been recently in khas possession or not, they had a right to a decision as to the alleged wrongful possession of the defendants. JOYKISHO MOOKERJEE v. ISSUES—continued.5. ISSUES IN SPECIAL SUITS—continued.

After foreclosure, a mortgagee was executing his decree for possession when an objection was preferred on the part of the landlord as purchaser of the tenure which had been sold in satisfaction of his own decree for rent. A suit was accordingly framed under s. 229, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, in which the mortgagee was made plaintiff, and the claimant defendant. Held that the whole question was, which of the two parties claiming was entitled to possession; and the issue to be decided was whether or no the tenure was sold subject to previous incumbrances. CHUNDER MONEE DABEE v. MOHESH CHUNDER BANERJEE

[12 W. R., 480]

55. ——— Suit for possession where defendant turns out to be a mortgagee—Procedure.—In a suit for possession of a piece of land where defendant pleads limitation, and his witness unexpectedly discloses that his possession is that of a mortgagee. Held that it was impossible for the Court to overlook that testimony, and that it was its duty to frame an issue, and expressly on the fact of the mortgage, and provide for the rights of the mortgagee; for if the mortgage was found to subsist in defendant, the plaintiff could not in this case recover a decree for possession, but should be referred to a suit properly framed for redemption. MUZBOOT SINGH v. CHUNDER MASHEE KOOR

[16 W. R., 44]

56. ——— Suit by patnidars for rent—Plea of lakhiraj title.—In a suit by patnidars for rent where the defendants plead a lakhiraj title set up long before the plaintiffs acquired their patni, the issue to be tried is, not whether the lakhiraj title is valid or not, but whether plaintiffs have at any time received rent for the lands in dispute. PURBOOD-DEEN MULLICK v. MOLAM BIBE

[14 W. R., 140]

57. ——— Suit for damages and injunction for cutting bund—Issue of title and cause of action.—In a suit to have the portion of a bund cut by the defendant closed up, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from so cutting the bund in future as to injure the plaintiff. Held that it was material to try the question whether the plaintiff had a cause of action, and also the question as to the property in the bund, because if the bund belonged exclusively to the plaintiff, the defendant, unless he could prove a right of user, was a trespasser, and on the other hand, if it belonged exclusively to the defendant, it would be necessary to enquire whether the defendant had so used his own property as to injure the property of his neighbour. NUND KISHORE SINGH v. 58. ——— Suit by mortgagee for possession without foreclosure Raising issue by Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 141.—In a suit to recover possession of certain premises on the allegation that defendant had sold them to plaintiff's husband nearly twelve years previously, defendant denied the execution of the deed on which plaintiff relied. The first Court was satisfied as to the fact of execution, but, perceiving that possession had not followed, had some doubt as to the nature of the transaction and examined a witness thereon. The result was that the transaction was found to be not an absolute sale, but a mortgage. As this fact, however, had been neither pleaded nor relied upon, the Munsif gave plaintiff a decree. The lower Appellate Court, finding that the preliminary foreclosure proceedings had not been taken by the plaintiff, reversed the decision. Held that it was incumbent on the Court of first instance, under Act VIII of 1859, s. 141, to frame an issue as to the nature of the transaction, and that the suit was properly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court because plaintiff had not foreclosed the mortgage. NUNDO LALL MITTER v. PROSUNNO MOYER DEBIA [19 W. R., 333]

59. — Suit for possession without demand of possession—Decision by Appellate Court without raising issue on point not raised.—A suit to recover possession of land in the wrongful possession of the defendant having been decreed by the first Court, the decision was reversed by the lower Appellate Court because it did not appear that there had been any demand of possession. Held that, before deciding the case in this way, the lower Appellate Court ought to have framed an issue as to whether there had been a demand of possession. MAHOMED RASID KHAN CHOWDHRY v. JODOO MIRDHA 20 W. R., 401

60. — Suit for enhancement of rent—Raising issue as to notice of enhancement—Procedure.—In a suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates, where it is found that a single notice has been issued, although there are two holdings at two rents, the Court should frame an issue which will allow the plaintiffs and the defendant, if they wish it, to give evidence—the former to show that the two holdings are now held at one consolidated rent, and it may be enhanced as of one holding—and the latter that he is entitled to have the enhancement made in such a way that he may give up one and retain the other. NIDHOO MONEE JOGINER v. KISHEN NATH BANERJEE 20 W. R., 442

61. — Suit for fees for officiating at marriages—Duty of Judge—Framing issues.—Plaintiff sued to recover certain fees from defendant, alleging that he had a right to officiate at marriages among the defendant's caste-people, and that, according to this right, he (plaintiff) had officiated at the marriage of the defendant's son at his request. The lower Court raised the issue, whether the plaintiff was entitled to the right alleged by him, and the issue was accepted by the parties without any objection. That Court held that, albeit plaintiff was head or senior of the caste, he could not have any right in that character to any fees at weddings, and accordingly dismissed the suit. In appeal the District Judge found that, if any such right had ever existed in the plaintiff, it had been taken away by Act XIX of 1844; he was also of opinion that the plaintiff had not been invited to assist and did not assist at the marriage ceremony in question, and he affirmed the decree of the Court below. Held by the High Court, in reversal of the decrees of the lower Courts, that Act XIX of 1844 did not apply to the case, and that the District Judge was bound to decide the question really involved in the issue, viz., whether, invited or uninvited, plaintiff was entitled by custom to the fees claimed by him. APAYE v. RAMA 1 L. R., 3 Bom., 210

6. OMISSION TO SETTLE ISSUES.

62. — Omission to raise proper issues—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 139-141—Practice of Privy Council.—In a suit raising issues of fact it did not appear from the record transmitted from India that the Judge of the Zillah Court had in conformity with the Code of Civil Procedure (VIII of 1859), ss. 139-141, settled or recorded the issues in the suit, although he allowed evidence in the cause to be taken. In such circumstances the Judicial Committee postponed the hearing of the appeal until a certified copy of the proceedings in the cause should be transmitted, and, in the alternative of no such issues being settled, set aside the decree of the Sudder Court at Agra, with directions to that Court to remand the suit to the lower Court to be tried upon issues to be settled and recorded in conformity with the provisions of Act VIII of 1859. REWUN PERSHAD v. NATTAM RAMAIA alias BALLAKONDA RAMA ROW 2 Mad., 470

64. — Omission to frame issues—Ground for new trial.—Where, on an appeal, the counsel for the appellant admitted he could not succeed on the merits, as the evidence stood on the record, and their Lordships were of opinion that substantial justice had been done, the mere omission to settle issues by the Court of first instance, which was not made a ground of appeal to the first Court of appeal, but was noticed and commented on by that Court, was held not to constitute a fatal mistrial of the cause so as to render a new trial necessary. Rewun Pershad v. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, finding upon the admitted facts that the notice alleged was insufficient, but also decided the other issues raised, and held that the defendant was not entitled to a right of occupancy. Held that the finding upon the question of notice based upon the admitted facts being sufficient to dispose of the whole case, the Court erred in proceeding to determine any other issues raised in the suit. *BARHAMDEO NARAIN SINGH v.
